FOX MOVIETONE Talking and Singing pictures also have an important place in international education. As an example of this world-wide influence FOX Talking pictures are being used in the Orient to educate school children and salesmen to speak the English language. English being the commercial language of the world, FOX all-talking pictures are everywhere in demand for educational purposes. ➨ Artists who will be both seen and heard in the forthcoming season's FOX all-talking Movietone productions include some of the most famous from the ranks of the concert, musical and dramatic stage. You will HEAR and SEE John McCormack, Lenore Ulric, Will Rogers, to name only a few among the many famous personages appearing in Fox Movietone Pictures.

Watch your local theatre for the latest FOX MOVIETONE ALL TALKING PICTURE. Don't miss it And you will realize why the entire world is showering Fox pictures and players with awards for artistic merit.

. . . The Book That Zealous Reformers Once Burned in Public!

At Last!
Censorship No Longer Denies You This Thrill of Thrills—

Tales from THE GREAT DECAMERON...

YOU'LL never know life until you've read this greatest of all forbidden books! You'll never know how utterly stark and vivid a picture of human passions can be painted in words until you've feasted on the most fascinating tales from the greatest of all true-to-life books — the immortal Decameron of Boccaccio!

Between its pages, the thrill of a lifetime of reading awaits you. Before your very eyes is unfolded the glittering pageantry of a golden age now vanished—an age when passion, intrigue and high-riding romance held full sway. Past you, in a breath-taking parade, sweep some of the most beautiful, yet unprincipled, women of all time—women whose intense fascination fired men's blood and even altered the fates of empires . . . Here you will find tales of scarlet days, when a robust world drank of life and love to its very dregs!

Few writers have ever dared to write so intimately of the frailties to which the flesh is heir. But the flaming pen of Giovanni Boccaccio knew no restraint. Sophisticated and fearless to the ultimate degree, his stories are not only brilliant fiction of the most gripping variety—but also the most illuminating record of life in fourteenth-century Italy ever penned. Hardly a detail of these stirring times escaped his watchful eye—and what he saw, he wrote, without hesitation nor fear!

These Great Writers Have Taken Plots From the Decameron

Shakespeare took parts of The Merchant of Venice, Cymbeline, All's Well That Ends Well and Romeo and Juliet from these stories. Lessing took the plot of Nathan der Weise, Chaucer the idea of his Canterbury Tales, Dryden, Keats, Longfellow and Tennyson wrote poems—all based on these great tales, which have outlived thousands of manuscripts written since their day.

Mystery No Longer Shrouds This Brilliant Masterpiece!

Perhaps no other book ever written has had such an amazing history. Written in so vigorous a style as to be actually startling, it has long been a storm center of fierce controversy and even persecution. Critics and the haute-monde have acclaimed it with unstinted praise for its sparkling vividness and subject matter—while prudish zealots and tyrannical reformers, aghast at the utter frankness with which Boccaccio exposed human life and love in the raw, resorted to every possible means to keep this masterpiece from general circulation. At one time they actually went so far as to gather all the available copies and have them publicly burned!

But all that was yesterday! To-day the thrill that awaits the reader within the glowing pages of Decameron Tales is no longer denied you. This is the age of reason—and the peerless word-artistry of genial old Boccaccio has come into its own at last! . . . Now, for a short time only, you can inspect these great examples of realistic writing in your own home for five days, without obligation!

A Literary Treasure-House

Rich in fascinating plot, tense with action and vibrant with human passion—the Decameron has furnished plots for the world's great masters of literature. Longfellow, Keats, Dryden, Chaucer, and even the great Shakespeare himself sought these immortal pages for inspiration. In no other volume are the morals and customs of Italy of the fourteenth century so graphically laid before you—the way people lived, the hovels and palaces they dwelt in, the fantastic pleasures they indulged in—all are told with both wit and pathos that are indescribable. Thus the stories not only amuse and entertain, but constitute a landmark of literature which must not be passed over if you would broaden your vision—make yourself truly cultured.

WALLACE BEERY, who has just moved from Paramount to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, will have the leading rôle in Bugle Sounds, instead of Lon Chaney, who was originally slated for the part.

Mr. Chaney is suffering from an abscessed throat and has been advised by his physician to take a complete rest.

Beery will talk in the rôles which Chaney had planned on depicting silently.

Ann Pennington is moving her make-up box over to RKO studios, to play the leading rôle in Tanned Legs, a musical extravaganza.

Joseph Schildkraut has just finished work in The Mississippi Gamblers, for Universal, in which Joan Bennett has the feminine lead.

Typical Western heroes and villains of the old school will be seen with Louise Fazenda in the Christie talking picture, Faro Nell or In Old California, which is about to immortalize comically the melodrama of the good old Western screen. Jack Luden has been selected as the hero, and Frank Rice and Harry Woods will be in the cast.

Mary Nolan has almost recovered from a serious operation which was the result of an automobile accident several months ago. She will soon be able to resume her work in The Shanghai Lady, for Universal.

Alice Terry is back in Hollywood after an absence of three years spent in Europe, where she has been appearing in pictures produced by her husband, Rex Ingram. She has come out here to get the latest information about talking-picture recording equipment for Mr. Ingram.

Corinne Griffith is hard at work on Lilies of the Field, which will be an all-talkie, of course. Alexander Korda is the director.

Rumor has it that The Saturday Night Kid will be Clara Bow's last picture for Paramount, as her contract expires upon its completion. It is thought that she will sign as a special star with RKO, like Bebe Daniels and Richard Dix.

Traveling to Europe is no new experience for Ina Claire, so she was both guide and companion to her husband, John Gilbert, whose honeymoon with Miss Claire was his first trip across the pond. Here the newlyweds are shown aboard the Ile de France.

Dorothy Stone, daughter of the famous Fred Stone, had to make a wild dash across the continent to take Ruby Keeler Jolson's place in Show Girl, as the latter became seriously ill and had to withdraw from the cast.

Dolores Costello will not want for masculine attention in her next picture for Warner Brothers. Both Jack Mulhall and Chester Morris will be seen with her in Second Choice, and she couldn't go wrong on either of them.

Gloria Swanson is in Europe visiting her husband, Marquis Henri de la Falaise de la Coudray. She has just completed The Temptress, with which picture she hopes to make up some of her losses on Queen Kelly, which has never been released.

Another old-time favorite is about to stage a "come-back" via the vaudeville route. Theda Bara has just signed with the RKO circuit for a tour of the principal eastern and West Coast cities.

Richard Arlen's first starring vehicle will be an adaptation of The Lost God, a South Sea Island picture, in which Fay Wray will have the feminine lead.

Navy Blues will be William Haines' next starring picture for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. It will be directed by Clarence Brown.

Anita Stewart and her brand-new husband, George Converse, have returned to Hollywood after a honeymoon spent rambling lazily through the high Sierra Mountains in their gorgeous new roadster.

ELECTRICITY Amazingly Easy- My Simple-Practical Way

Don't spend your life slaving away in some small-pay, no-future job. Don't be satisfied with $20, $30, or $40 a week. Go into Electricity, where the Big Money is made today—where salaries of $50, $60, and $70 a week are just the average.

Learn Without Books - in 90 Days

Come to Coyne in Chicago and learn electricity in 90 days time. Not by books, lessons or correspondence, but by actual electrical work—building real batteries—winding big armatures—operating huge motors, dynamos and generators—wiring houses—constructing radio sets—working on airplane engines, etc., etc. In one department alone we generate enough Electricity to supply a small city with power!

Age, Lack of Education or Experience -- No Drawback

You need no advanced education, because I don't teach you out of books. And because you learn BY DOING, you get all the experience you'll need, right here at Coyne. I don't care if you don't know an armature from a generator; if you're 16 years old or 45. It makes no difference. Just spend 90 days here with me in the great Coyne Shops, and I'll prepare YOU for a Big Pay Electrical Job.

JOBS - PAY - FUTURE

Don't worry about a job—Coyne training settles the job question for life. Demand for Coyne men often exceeds the supply. Just recently one concern called on me for 150 Coyne graduates. And calls for more Coyne students are coming in almost daily. My big expert Employment Department will help you and back you up as long as you live—without one cent of cost to you. And if you want part-time work while here at School, we'll help you get that, too. We often have more good part-time jobs open than applicants for them.

Aviation Electricity

Right now I am giving a special training in Aviation Electricity—Radio—and Auto Ignition, without extra cost. Also, I'm making a very unusual tuition offer, with a refund of your railroad fare to Chicago. But to get these big advantages, you must act at once.

START TONIGHT AND REDUCE WEIGHT!

Start Reducing Tonight at Home and Feel Better Tomorrow Morning Than You Have For Months
(Every Statement Certified From Actual Experience)
SEND THE COUPON FOR YOUR FIRST THREE FAYRO BATHS

Thousands of smart women have found this easy way to take off excess weight once or twice a week. These women take refreshing Fayro baths in the privacy of their own homes.

Fayro contains many of the same natural mineral salts that make effective the waters of twenty-two hot springs of America, England and Continental Europe. For years the spas and hot springs bathing resorts have been the retreat of fair women and well groomed men.

Excess weight has been removed, skins have been made more lovely bodies more shapely, and minds brighter.

The Hot Springs Are Now Brought To You

A study of the analyses of the active ingredients of the waters from twenty-two of the most famous springs have taught us the secret of their effectiveness. You can now enjoy these benefits in your own bath. Merely put Fayro into your hot bath. It dissolves rapidly. You will notice and enjoy the pungent fragrance of its balsam oils and clean salts.

Then, Fayro, by opening your pores and stimulating perspiration, forces lazy body cells to sweat out surplus fat and bodily poisons. Add Fayro to your bath at night and immediately excess weight will have been removed in an easy, refreshing and asolutely harmless manner.

Fayro will refresh you and help your body throw off worn out fat and bodily poisons. Your skin will be clearer and smoother. You will sleep better after your Fayro bath and awaken feeling as though you had enjoyed a week's vacation.

Results Are Immediate

Weigh yourself before and after your Fayro bath. You will find you have lost weight. And a few nights later when you again add Fayro to your bath, you will once more reduce your weight. As soon as you are the correct weight for your height do not try to reduce further. No need to deny yourself wholesome meals. No need for violent exercise. No need for drugs or medicines. Merely a refreshing Fayro bath in the privacy of your own home.

Try Fayro At Our Risk

The regular price of Fayro is $1.00 a package. With the coupon you get 3 full sized packages and an interesting booklet "Health and Open Pores" for $2.50 plus the necessary postage. Send no money. Pay the postman. Your money refunded instantly if you want it. The booklet also contains dietetic lists and information compiled by eminent specialists.

"Stop clowning!"

. . . . HE WHISPERED

—but when I began to play

I HAD been trying—unsuccessfully—to make an impression on Helen for weeks. But she didn't seem to see me at all. Naturally, I was pretty downhearted at the turn affairs had taken. For, at the beginning of our acquaintance, she had certainly been far more friendly with me than now. Utterly perplexed, I turned to her brother for advice.

"Forget it," he laughed. "Helen isn't annoyed by anything you've done. It's something you haven't done. . . . Oh, I say, I'm sorry!" he broke off suddenly, red as a beet.

"What were you going to say?" I demanded. "What haven't I done?"

"It's nothing. Just a slip of the tongue," he evaded clumsily. But I insisted that he tell me what he had intended to say, and at last he consented.

"Well you know, Helen has always been fond of music. I once heard her say she could never care for anyone who didn't know how to play some instrument or other. Of course, that's ridiculous. Lots of perfectly nice people—congenial, charming—have no musical ability. But you know how girls are. Once they get a notion, they stick to it, come what may!"

I almost broke out into three cheers at Jerry's explanation. But that would have spoiled my secret—the secret I had kept so well all these months. Instead, I said:

"I wish you had told me this before. For I can play a bit, you know—one-finger stuff. Do you suppose it will convince that sister of yours that I'm not altogether a heathen and outside the pale?"

He laughed. "It might, at that!" he agreed. "Why not try it at the party tonight? It ought to show her your heart's in the right place, anyway!"

A Dramatic Surprise

True to his word, Jerry made an opportunity for me to "strut my stuff" that night. I sat down at the piano and did a little chop-stick version of that old favorite, "Yes, We Have No Bananas!" to everybody's intense delight.

Calls of "What technique!" "Another Paderewski!" "When are you going to give a Carnegie Hall recital?" came from all sides. But suddenly Jerry was at my side.

"Stop clowning!" he whispered. "Helen thinks I put you up to this to make fun of her. She suspects that I told you she has a weakness for music. . . ."

But instead of jumping up and apologizing to Helen, as he expected me to, I calmly swung into the opening bars of that beautiful ballad, "Garden in the Rain."

At first astonishment kept them all silent, but before long the whole crowd was singing—even Helen.

That was the beginning. It must have been an hour later before they allowed me to leave the piano—during which I had played everything they asked for. And believe me, they had asked for plenty! Songs, dance music, classical selections, jazz. . . .

My Secret

Jerry's eyes were almost popping out with curiosity by the time we went home. "Why on earth didn't you tell me you knew how to play?" he demanded.

"Oh, I thought I'd surprise you," I laughed.

"You sure did!" he averred. "But I don't understand yet. If you could play as well as you did tonight, why have you been keeping it a secret? I distinctly remember you once said you couldn't play. Yet now . . ."

I looked at Helen. "Well, you see, tonight there was a special reason for playing." I said. "I couldn't have done it months ago. Why, even last year Jerry's remark about my not being able to play, wouldn't have been an exaggeration.

"You see," I continued, "I made a discovery that has made me the happiest chap on earth tonight! I heard about the U. S. School of Music method of teaching music by mail, in one's spare time, at home, without a teacher."

Then I told them all about the U. S. School course. How it does away with tiresome scales and exercises. How it eliminates an expensive private teacher. How it is so clear and concise that even a child could easily understand it.

"Why, I played simple tunes and melodies right from the start!" I enthused. "But I didn't want to tell you folks until I was sure I could play well enough to put it over. Besides, I didn't know Helen was so crazy about music . . ."

"Not only about music," she murmured, with a shy smile.

You, too, can learn to play this quick and easy way

This is not the story of one isolated case. Over half a million men and women have learned to play their favorite instruments—at home, in their spare time, without a teacher—the U. S. School way.

To prove how practical this course is, the U. S. School of Music has arranged a typical demonstration lesson and explanatory booklet which you may have Free. They show how anyone can learn to play by note in less than half the time and at a fraction of the cost of old, slow methods. The booklet will also tell you all about the amazing new Automatic Finger Control.

THE EDITOR'S OPINION

¶ On This and That

PROTESTS from the smaller theaters in the land have made themselves heard in Hollywood. Producers will continue to make silent versions of talking pictures for the thousands upon thousands of unwired houses.

No fear, then, that the fans unable to attend a theater equipped for talkies will have to be satisfied with second-rate pictures. Universal, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Fox, Paramount, RKO—all the big producers—have announced silent versions to accompany their 1930 program of pictures.

Captain Roscoe Fawcett, Editor.

But once a fan has attended a talkie, a silent picture seems strange and unnatural, and becomes not only silent, but dumb. It is like a taste for olives—acquired only after eating a few. After you get the habit, you'll reach for a talkie instead of a silent.

Peter Pan's Pal

JACKIE COOGAN is coming back to pictures again. I am not sure that he will be a riot when he gets back into films. There isn't any Jackie Coogan anymore. The Jackie we knew is romping around somewhere in Never Never Land.

Taking it on the Chin

ON THE other hand, the return of Viola Dana and Shirley Mason to the screen proved that one never can tell.

A few years ago the Flugrath sisters were at the top of the heap. Then they slipped into the discard, shuffled off by the hand of Fate that plays such strange tricks on Hollywood folk. Yet Shirley and Viola laughed it off, and carried on.

Since Fame chose to wane, Viola worked in quickies, toured vaudeville, played in stock companies. Between pictures they managed on a small income from their partnership in a beauty shop in Hollywood.

With the coming of the talkies, the revolving wheel of Fortune brought them back again. Both could sing and dance; they were seasoned troupers. They'll accept this lucky break with the same bright smile and eager courage with which they greeted the blows.

Watch for their sister act in Warner Brothers' The Show of Shows. And give the little gals a big hand.

No Tears, Please!

IN THE field of farce comedy, Laura La Plante deserves acclaim. We grow weary of comedies that are not content with ringing laughs, but must jerk the tears as well, with pathos and bathos. Laura whirls happily through a frothy comedy and needs no sad, soft music or clown-with-broken-heart episodes. She found her sphere in Finders Keepers, proved her right to rule in the domain of comedy by an even more laudable performance in The Love Trap. Give the laurels to Laura.

Thirteen

DOLORES DEL RIO, heartbroken after the death of Jaime, for seven years her husband, has been lifted away from disconsolance by a strenuous tour across the country in a series of personal appearances. Hard work, with no time for thoughts that haunt the mind of Latin people more deeply perhaps than the Nordic. While celebrating her twenty-third birthday at Breezy Point Lodge, home of the publisher of SCREEN SECRETS, she revealed another trait so characteristic of the people of Mexico.

Miss Del Rio loves to fly, and does so whenever she can give watchful studio officials and managers the slip. She was greatly excited when they finally gave her permission to serve tea for her friends in a big plane. At thirteen thousand feet, Peggy Hamilton, a member of the party, pointed out that there were thirteen guests aboard!

"But I do not care," Miss Del Rio declared seriously, "for thirteen is my lucky number!"

A Birthday Present

MR. AND MRS. JIMMY GLEASON, the famous stage couple whose success with Is Zat So? and The Shannons of Broadway, brought them inevitably to Hollywood at the behest of the movie moguls, are justly proud of their son Russell.

Russell is a tall, slow spoken youth, with a quiet humor. When his parents built their new home in Hollywood, Russell wished to contribute his share to the comfort of the establishment. As a Pathe player—did you see him in The Flying Fool?—he is making a rather attractive salary for a lad of his age.

So he visited a constructor and arranged for the installation of a swimming pool. On his father's anniversary, he presented him with a little bronze plaque, dedicating the pool to Jimmy Gleason as a birthday present.

Jimmy values that little bit of metal with more satisfaction, I believe, than all his other possessions.

A Tip From Empey

ARTHUR GUY EMPEY, idol of the readers of Battle Stories Magazine, is supervising the filming of Troopers Three, his first talkie. Guy has a tip for the producers which is well worth considering.

He gives the audience a chance to laugh at a joke in the dialogue without rushing into another speech. Too many laughs, he points out, are killed because the talkie producers forget that the fans can't laugh and listen at the same time. Either they must restrain their guffaws, or miss the significance of the lines that follow.

But suppose the audience fools you, and doesn't laugh? Leave that to Guy!

Another Idea

ANOTHER irksome imperfection in the talkies is solved by Raymond Cannon, Fox director. In Why Leave Home?, Mr. Cannon doesn't allow a moment of absolute silence during the film, which means that you may strain your ears in vain for the familiar hum and scrape of the recording apparatus. Instead, he supplies sound effects that would naturally be heard under given circumstances in real life.

It's a Gift

THIS Maurice Chevalier seems to be in a fair way to becoming one of the most popular matinee idols of the current crop of talkie stars.

He has that certain something which makes women go goofy about him, which could make anyone's fortune if they knew what it was. He isn't handsome. Take his features one by one and they are not impressive. He wears his clothes as though he had climbed into them sliding down a brass pole. His voice wouldn't make Gatti-Cazzazza utter any cries of joy. But he has that strange indefinable quality, the nearest name for which seems to be personality, that transforms all his imperfections into something entirely charming and wholly his own. Sex appeal surely has nothing to do with it here. Perhaps it is the gusto, the joyousness that seems to bubble up from way down inside him. I don't know.

Real Legs

JOHN STAHL, the producer who is plotting to bring Aimee McPherson to the screen, says, on the other hand, that the movies are devoting their attention to the one thing they can never do successfully—comic opera. The tired business man wants to see real legs—gooseflesh and all—not shadow pictures of them.

Florence Retires

THIS is one of the ironies. The girl who had the most charming voice of any actress in Hollywood will not be among those present in the talkies. This was Florence Vidor.

Just to hear her say "no" was a consolation to the young hearts she turned down. It seems to me that she would have been wonderful in talkie pictures; but her contract has not been renewed by Paramount.

Misty Memories

THE most melancholy experience I have had for some time was seeing a recent revival of The Kid, one of Chaplin's first big pictures. It gave me the same sort of pang that parents in future years will get when they drag out their home movies of little Willie, now grown fat and in the brokerage business, looking cherubic in golden curls and a Fauntleroy suit.

Time has dealt strangely with the little group of good troupers assembled in that picture. Little Jackie Coogan, round-faced and wide-eyed, has grown up to inherit the cares and tangles that go with the battle to keep a large fortune. There was Lita Grey Chaplin, amazingly beautiful in a minor bit, unknown, untroubled by fame, but also untouched by time and trouble which have wrought not too kindly with her.

There was Edna Purviance, in all the glory and gusto of her young prime. Now she is retired, lost in obscurity, living in Europe, perhaps trying to forget pictures and her unhappy love affair with Chaplin. There was Kathleen Key, once a star, almost forgotten now. There was Chaplin himself, imbuing even the moments of pathos with an irrepressible joy in life that is no longer to be found in the face that is lined with sorrow.

On only two has time left no impression. They are Chuck Reisner, who plays the part of a burly prizefighter, and Henry Bergman.

Chuck has become one of Hollywood's most successful directors, and fat and jovial Henry Bergman presides over the tables of Henry's one of Hollywood's most popular eating places.

NEW PORTRAITS OF TALKIE STARS

ALL the delicacy of lavender and old lace is reflected in this portrait of Marian Nixon and John Barrymore, from a scene in Warner Brothers' General Crack. This forthcoming picture is the great Barrymore's first venture on the talking screen.

MARY DUNCAN, daughter of an old Southern family and a former Cornell University student, wants most of all to play the role of Manon Lescaut on the screen. In her forthcoming picture, The Man Who Came Back, Mary's hands, reputed the most beautiful on the screen, play an important, seductive part.

—Ruth Harriet Louise.

JOHN GILBERT'S magnetic charm has found a new and more potent vehicle than his genius of pantomime—his voice! The fiery Gilbert's forthcoming production is Redemption, opposite the equally fiery Renee Adoree.

DOLORES DEL RIO'S alluring singing voice made her loveliness more apparent than ever when she sang the love songs of old Acadie, in United Artists' Evangeline.

—Ruth Harriet Louise.

NORMA SHEARER'S splendid performance in The Trial of Mary Dugan gave the talking screen a new dramatic actress. Her next appearance will be in M-G-M's Last of Mrs. Cheney.

—Pach Bros.

IRENE BORDONI'S marvelous voice, which has thrilled Broadway stage audiences for many seasons, will soon be heard in First National's adaptation of Miss Bordoni's greatest stage success, Paris.

—Elmer Fryer.

BILLIE DOVE proves in Her Private Life, that beauty has brains and that she can rely on her voice and acting ability as something apart from her dazzling pulchritude. Her next picture bears this title and promises great things for Billie.

The TRAGIC LIFE STORY

Here is Mabel in the dinner-pail scene from Molly-O. The Sennett fun-factory was a veritable kindergarten of genius and fame, with such names as Gloria Swanson, Charlie Chaplin, Wallace Beery and Louise Fazenda on the payroll. Mabel Normand was the undisputed queen in those happy days.

Mabel Normand's dazzling beauty to the very Throne of Comedy. dal and Illness, to change from comedy

By HARRY

MABEL NORMAND will always be remembered as the little girl who littered up the floor of her limousine with peanut shells.

As the girl who walked down the street with The Police Gazette under one arm and the highbrow Atlantic Monthly under the other.

As the girl with the brain of a philosopher and the ribald tongue of a gutter-snipe.

As the girl whose intimate friends included a woman of international notoriety, a gentle old priest, the queen of a night club, a learned judge of the Federal bench and an old Indian squaw.

As the girl whose friends and associates absolutely adored her; whose servants would willingly have committed murder in her behalf; yet who suffered as no other girl in Hollywood ever suffered from scandal and unjust gossip.

As the girl who all but ruined herself through self sacrifice; and met only with ingratitude.

As the girl to whom hardship and poverty brought happiness; to whom wealth and fame brought unhappiness.

The life of Mabel Normand is as full of contradiction as a chapter from Alice In Wonderland.

Mabel has always been a little tomboy.

of MABEL NORMAND

carried her from a childhood of poverty Then came stalking the lurid jinxes, Scan- to tragedy the Life of Mabel Normand.

CARR

SHE was born on Staten Island in New York Harbor, in 1894. Her people were miserably poor. She "jes' growed," like Topsy. The little girls of the neighborhood were too tame. She played most of the time with the boys. She could "skin the cat" on the limbs of all the trees, play "one ol' cat," wield a shinny club, and put up a pretty good fist fight on occasion.

Situated as Staten Island is, quite naturally the great playmate of all the children was the sea. Mabel played tag with the Atlantic Ocean from the time she could walk. It was important to her after life that she learned to swim and dive when she was a little girl. It wasn't tame-cat swimming that Mabel did. She could do any daring stunt in the water that the boys did. Her first distinction was to win the diving championship of Staten Island.

Another fact that was to be an important factor in her life was that in Mabel's gang was a little French-Canadian boy. His name at that time was Louis Coti. In later years he altered the spelling to Lew Cody. He and Mabel played "prisoners' base" and swam together, as little children. Now she is Mrs. Lew Cody.

She wasn't all boy, however. She had the usual

Remember Raggedy Rose? Rollicking, carefree, happy Mabel had only to "be herself" in her heyday to produce another box-office record-breaker for her employers. Tomboy, whirlwind parts were the very breath of life to Mabel. She always took great delight in putting her funniest foot forward.

Louis Coti was a little French-Canadian boy in Mabel's childhood gang. Now he's Lew Cody and she's Mrs. Lew.

yearnings of little girls for dolls and clothes. But her family had such a direful struggle for existence that she never had money for either.

I HAVE heard Mabel tell how she used to stand in front of the store windows at Christmas time and look, until her little heart ached, at the dolls that some little rich girl would find in her Christmas stocking. She told me how one day she found her favorite window so frosted by the storm of the night before that she couldn't see into the window. So she leaned against the glass and licked a peek hole through the frost with her little hot tongue.

At the time Mabel was growing up, it was the period of girls and artists. "The Gibson Girl" upstaged the world from the covers of Life. "The Penrhyn Stanlaws Girl" smiled out through a swirl of decoration. "The Howard Chandler Christy Girl" beamed from bachelors' walls. A girl with a lovely face found her footsteps drawn to the studios. Mabel was a beautiful child—with big lustrous eyes, a face that glowed with animation and intelligence. Her figure was superb.

Several girls of her acquaintance, among them Alice Joyce and Olive Thomas, were posing for artists: they brought Mabel along. She posed for many of the magazine covers and story illustrations. She posed for Penrhyn Stanlaws, C. D. Williams, Cole Phillips and other famous artists. She got 50 cents an hour and $5.00 for posing for photographs for front covers. Between times, she was a cloak model. Once every season, she and Alice Joyce and several other girls went to Wanamaker's in Philadelphia, as part of a New York fashion show.

Mabel got to be quite famous as a model. It was in the days of full skirts with ruffles and she won a prize offered for the most beautiful "Fluffy Ruffles" girl.

One day she and some of the other girls were reading a newspaper in one of the studios. They saw an advertisement stating that twenty beautiful girls were wanted at the motion picture studio of the Vitagraph Company.

Michael Sinnott worked his way from a pick-and-shovel job to singing in a chorus. Then he changed his name to Mack Sennett and started making comedies for the Keystone Company.

At that time, Vitagraph came pretty near being the motion picture business. Under the leadership of Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, the company was beginning to reach out from little news flashes of flags waving from flag poles, cows standing in running streams, engines steaming down the tracks, and started little dramas.

Candidates appeared in swarms. Commodore Blackton says it was no job to pick out Mabel from the swarm. She shone out in the line of waiting candidates like a diamond on a sidewalk, she was so beautiful and so adorably young.

HER first picture narrowly escaped being her last. In order to make the tank deeper for diving, a pit filled with water and surrounded by planking was constructed inside the other tank. They didn't know much about studio engineering in those days. Just as Mabel was getting ready to make a dive into the tank, the whole thing burst with a roar and a rush of water. Everybody on the set was half drowned and heavy planks were flung about like chaff from a threshing machine.

Mabel took a dislike to Charlie Chaplin and they would fight like a dog and a monkey. But their comedies made together were record-breakers.

After the swimming picture was finished, the rest of the twenty swimming young ladies were sent on their way. Mabel was offered a regular job. Her salary sounded like staggering wealth. She got $25—every week!

At that time, there were several stars in the Vitagraph Company who were headed for fame. Jim Corbett, ex-heavyweight champion of the world, was making some physical culture pictures with the help of Florence Turner. Anita Stewart was a lovely little girl just trying to break in. Maurice Costello—father of Helene and Dolores—was the bright star.

Mabel's first picture was with Maurice Costello. It was called Over The Garden Wall. She played the part of a girl who disguised herself as a maid to test the affections of her rich lover.

MABEL didn't last long at Vitagraph. That corporation decided to stagger along without her services—owing to a typically Mabelesque incident.

The old elevated railroad ran past the studio—right past Mabel's dressing room. This was far too great a temptation for her tomboy heart. She used to stand in the window and kid the passengers as they went by. Some of them got sore and complained to the picture company officials, who looked very grave at Mabel. That young lady was defiant. "What do the dirty dogs want to look in my dressing room windows for?" she demanded. The discussion led to this and that. It finally led to Mabel's looking for a job.

At that time the old Biograph was getting started on Fourteenth street in New York. A long, lean actor named David Wark Griffith was begging for a chance to direct a picture. A very much embarrassed Irishman, who had been working his way from a pick and shovel on the streets to a job singing in a chorus, was asking them if they needed a strong man. His name was Michael Sinnott; but he preferred being called Mack Sennett. A little girl from the stage was there with her mother. Her name was Mary Pickford. Blanche Sweet, a young dancer, had come to do a dance scene in a picture and had lingered on to become an actress.

Mabel's work in Tillie's Punctured Romance was so screamingly funny that exhibitors the country over yelled for more—and they were given Mickey. This picture shows Mabel as she appeared in the title rôle in Mickey.

BILLY BITZER, the veteran camera-ace who photographed Broken Blossoms, Intolerance, The Birth of a Nation and other Griffith masterpieces, remembers when Mabel joined the Biograph company. He says she was at that time the most beautiful girl he had ever seen.

The trouble was that she didn't get the breaks. Her flare was for comedy and most of the Griffith pictures in those days were solemn and heavy affairs.

The other girls, Mary Pickford and the Gishes, tried very hard to get on. They were always experimenting with new makeups, making tests, etc. But her job weighed very lightly on Mabel. So it can't be said that she made a great artistic commotion in the picture world.

In those days, Griffith was turning out a picture a week. Mabel, Mary Pickford, Blanche Sweet—and later the Gish girls and Florence Turner, were in most of them. Whenever there was a comedy bit, Mabel played it. When there wasn't, she frequently played heavy ladies with a dark past.

The first great adventure of her life came when Griffith brought the Biograph company out West. They found an old house in Los Angeles and played one-reel dramas.

And Now It's The

Hollywood's "Eighteen-day Diet" has taken the movie folk by storm. They're all doing it, and no wonder—read the results they're getting!

By DOROTHY SPENSLEY

LENORE ULRIC lost seven pounds in eight days with Hollywood's new reducing diet. And she confesses to cheating a little bit at that.

Mrytle Stedman had to stop in three days for she had lost six pounds and that was her quota for the experiment.

Lily Damita sacrificed seven exquisite pounds in nine days.

John McCormick, husband of Colleen Moore, went the whole route and took off twenty pounds in the eighteen days.

Which explains why grapefruit is up in Hollywood, why the new diet is all the rage there and threatens to invade the rest of the country, and why Herman J. Mankiewicz may some day adorn a pedestal in the film capital.

For the new diet glorifies the grapefruit. It really seems to work. Mankiewicz is credited with introducing it. And the Mayo brothers, of Rochester, Minnesota, given credit for the diet by rumor, emphatically deny originating it.

Herman J. Mankiewicz, credited with sponsoring the Eighteen-Day Diet, arrives at Paramount Studios fortified by grapefruit for the day's work.

MONTE BRICE, Pathé director, who dropped two and a half pounds in three days, declares it is a new racket of the grapefruit growers, for forty-three of the fifty-four prescribed menus list that fruit.

The story goes that Mankiewicz, former New York World reporter, drama editor of The New York Times and The New Yorker, and author of such Paramount films as The Man I Love and the dialogue of Thunderbolt, went into a restaurant. It was Eddie Brandstatter's Montmartre café.

Charles Morton seems aghast at the suggestion of Helen Twelvetrees that the Eighteen-Day Diet might do desirable things to his bodily contour.

WAITERS began clustering around him. They proffered the choicest viands of the place.

But he produced from his vest pocket a typewritten list and spoke: "Give me half a grape fruit, one egg, six slices of cucumber, one slice of whole wheat toast and a pot of coffee."

Brandstatter, attracted by the furore in his café, approached Mankiewicz and found that the writer held in his hand a complete schedule of food for each meal to be eaten in eighteen days. Being a business man as well as a restaurateur, Brandstatter had the menus printed on the back of his dinner card and he has been doing a rushing business ever since.

Mankiewicz seems to have had the proper crusading spirit, for he converted Gene Markey, Guy Bolton, King Vidor, Harry

Eighteen-Day Diet

Winifred Westover's sacrifice for her art involved putting on thirty-five pounds for her rôle in Lummox—the Eighteen-Day Diet should enable her to drop this weight easily.

Lenore Ulric, exotic brunette of stage fame, found herself seven pounds lighter at the end of eight days' observance of the Diet.

Johnny Mack Brown, after seven days of the Eighteen-Day Diet and the loss of four pounds, decided that he had accomplished his desire, and halted the reducing regimen.

Crocker, Lloyd Sheldon, Pepi Lederer and a score of others to the diet. At one party he passed out thirty copies of the schedule.

It is rumored that four out of five have it—in Hollywood.

SOME of the favorites are having their troubles with it. Bernie Fineman of the Paramount executive forces, has slipped three or four times after starting bravely, it is said. Fay Compton is taking her third whirl at it. Count Edgar Berlanga, the titled Spaniard attached to the embassy at Washington, who gravitates to Hollywood at frequent intervals, is said to follow the menus closely as far as they go and then goes on much farther.

Robert Frazer, Ben Lyon and Stuart Holmes insist they do not need the diet, but they refuse to let Mankiewicz and his steadily lessening girth hog all the popularity.

The cost of reducing by this route varies according to the locale at which it is tried out.

At Brandstatter's Montmartre, the first day's luncheon costs $1.25. At Moore's, on the Paramount lot, it costs 40 cents. At the Munchers' Café, on the Fox lot, a posted notice reads: "Eighteen Day Diet—Breakfast or Luncheon Served Amid Cheerful Surroundings in the Munchers." Henry's the delicatessen, has out a sign: "We Are Featuring Mayo Brothers' Eighteen-Day Diet. Ask for our Special Menus." The diet for the eighteen days cost $16.45 at Moore's café.

HERE is the complete schedule as it appears on the Brandstatter menu:

First Day

Breakfast: One-half grapefruit, coffee. Breakfast the same every day.
Lunch: One-half grapefruit, 1 egg, 6 slices cucumber, 1 slice Melba toast, tea or coffee $1.25
Dinner: Two eggs, 1 tomato, ½ head lettuce, ½ grapefruit, coffee $1.50

Second Day

Lunch: One orange, 1 egg, lettuce, 1 slice Melba toast, tea 1.25
Dinner: Broiled steak (plain), ½ head lettuce, 1 tomato, ½ grapefruit, tea or coffee..... 2.00

Third Day

Lunch: One-half grapefruit, 1 egg, lettuce, 8 slices cucumber, tea or coffee 1.25
Dinner: One lamb chop (trim fat before cooking), 1 egg, 3 radishes, two olives, ½ grapefruit, lettuce, tea or coffee 2.00

Fourth Day

Lunch: Pot cheese, 1 tomato, ½ grapefruit, 1 Melba toast, tea or coffee 1.25
Dinner: Broiled steak, watercress, ½ grapefruit.... 1.75

AN EPIC of MELODY

—Fred R. Archer.

John Boles croons a melody of love to Vivienne Segal in this moonlit scene from Warner Brothers' spectacular covered-wagon epic, Song of the West.

By BURNS BRADLEY

THE old pioneers, who trekked westward in their covered wagons through Indian country, fording streams and making their way toward California and its gold through the vast uncharted bleakness of the Rockies, had nothing on Director Ray Enright and the technical crew, staff and cast of Song of the West.

This picture is the first all-natural-color, all-talking-and-singing, outdoor picture. And the filming of it on location was as much of a pioneering stunt as were the voyages of the covered-wagon pioneers whose hardships it portrays.

In going out into the wilds to film this picture, with uncertain sunlight, and problematical electrical current, Warner Brothers pioneered a new field.

One of the big scenes of the picture is the march of the covered-wagon train. To film and record this, it was necessary to conceal microphones and cameras in the underbrush so that one camera would not film another, and so that no modern microphone would be photographed in a scene representing the days of 1849.

When the company, numbering nearly 500 people, arrived at Lone Pine, California, 250 miles from Los Angeles, everything was in readiness. The covered wagons were on hand; horses, mules and oxen had been gathered from the ranchers in the district; and local drivers, "bull whackers" and mule "skinners," employed. The local town did not offer accommodations for 500 people, so a complete tent colony had to be built to house the movie troupe.

Life on location is no bed of roses. The bugle is blown at 5:45 a. m., and breakfast is at 6:30. After breakfast, cars took the 400 people to the location site, where filming started just as soon as the sun was high, and strong enough.

THE LOWE-DOWN

It was this sort of facial activity that Ed Lowe had to unlearn when he went from the stage to the silent screen, a transition that demanded the development of a new technique.

Edmund Lowe and Corinne Griffith in a scene from Outcast; Edmund had learned "to speak softly and with as little movement of the lips as possible."

But scenes showing a tightly closed mouth are not so good for the talkies, so Edmund Lowe had to unlearn silent movie technique and revert to facial practices of his stage days.

Edmund Lowe tells of the changes his art has had to undergo during his career on the stage, the silent screen, and in the talkies—and comes out strong for the speaking movie.

By ALLEN A. STAMPS

WHY are you so certain that dialogue pictures are with us to stay?" I asked Edmund Lowe.

"Because the talking picture, as a scientific fact, is too great a discovery to be discarded," Lowe responded earnestly. "Only a few years ago, when motion pictures —the silent kind—were new, people were saying of them the same things they are today saying about dialogue productions. People were saying: 'Moving pictures cannot succeed; they cannot compete with the stage.' But moving pictures did succeed and they became many, many times greater than the stage has ever been.

"Science will not let talking pictures be cast aside. Do you realize how wonderful it is that a man can move and talk and the entire world can see and hear him? Of course, talking pictures are as yet very new and very far from perfection, but do not lose sight of the fact that they have been in existence only a short time. Ultimately, motion pictures will talk, will be in natural color and will have depth—the third dimension. I am convinced that the day will come when motion pictures will be so lifelike that an audience will receive the same reactions from a photoplay that it now receives from a legitimate play."

THIS conversation, which I am recording as nearly as I can remember it, took place in the cellar store room beneath the Lowe residence in Beverly Hills. I had accompanied the screen star down a narrow flight of steps on an exploring excursion into the past. Deep down in a dark recess of the damp cellar stood an old trunk, mildewed with age. Edmund Lowe knelt before it. Article by article, the actor lifted memorable souvenirs into the light. A moth-eaten swallow-tail. A highly-colored suit with extremely narrow trouser legs, broad hips and heavily-padded shoulders. A tarnished cigarette case and a worn billfold containing several blank checks.

THIS is the first time I have opened this trunk since 1920. These aged props bring back memories. Why, digging into this old trunk is like returning dead things to life."

"Including your voice, Eddie," I suggested. "Do you realize that talking pictures have done for you just what you are doing for the old swallow-tail? Talking pictures have opened your old wardrobe trunk, the trunk that used to accompany you on tours, and lifted your voice right out of moth balls and returned it to you, good as new."

"Great guns, you're right," Lowe's voice was almost sepulchral. "It had not occurred to me in just that sense, but what you say is true. My voice has been stored away.

"Why, it was my voice that really lifted me to success. When I was on the stage, critics were most kind to me. They pointed out that I promised great possibilities. Their encouraging words made me more ambitious. I

Anne Howe tells what they're doing—

THERE was a scene in The Virginian which called for Mary Brian to be frightened by a tame cow running toward her.

Before the scene was taken, Director Victor Fleming explained, "Now, Mary, there is nothing to be afraid of. The cow is tame but she is supposed to become suddenly frightened and run toward you. But she isn't to hurt you."

"I know," said Mary, "but are you sure the cow understands that?"

ROSETTA DUNCAN wired Hollywood friends. "I am coming. Vivian and my dog will stay another week in Yosemite because my dog is getting such a kick out of chasing the bears."

His Habit

THE script girl over on the RKO lot called to the assistant director to ask a question.

The assistant only hummed a tune.

Again she called and again he hummed the same little tune over and over. In desperation she asked him if he did not hear her.

"I beg your pardon," he said, "but I have been working on these musical comedies so long that when anyone asks me a question, I sing the answer."

Getting Service

ERIC VON STROHEIM had ordered some new mown hay to be used in a picture. He was not pleased with the hay brought him and said, "When I order new mown hay I don't want weeds."

"But," said the man, "that is new mown hay."

"That's not new mown hay," said Von. "You can't argue with me. I'm the boss around here."

Reed Asks a Favor

VICTOR BARAVALLE arranged all the music for the picture, Rio Rita. It was necessary for him to direct the orchestra that accompanied John Boles in singing his part. They just couldn't get together.

They would start, John would hold up his hand and say, "Just a minute." Then they would begin again and Mr. Baravalle would hold up his hand and say, "Just a minute." After this had happened a few times, Luther Reed, director of the picture, said, "Now, listen, boys. I know I am only the director here, but give me a break. Let me stop them once in a while."

Omitting an Essential

THE Fox Company built a very nice bungalow dressing room on the lot for Mr. Will Rogers. It was quite the most novel one ever built on the lot and everyone expected Mr. Rogers to be overjoyed.

He looked it over and then disappointed everyone by saying, "It's a keen shack, but where's the place for my horse?"

Mr. Winfield Sheehan, vice-president of Fox films, had personally planned the erection of the building and was rather embarrassed to find he had forgotten the most important part—the stable. However, it's there now and everyone is happy.

His Limitation

BILL HAINES doesn't exactly shun publicity, but he does shy at it. The press walked gaily up to him and said, "Well, Mr. Haines, we would like a little story on you. Won't take up much of your time."

Haines looked a little bored and asked, "What kind of a story do you want?"

"Oh, just a little story—about ten thousand words."

"Sorry," said Bill, "I don't know that many words."

Trials of an Equestrienne

IT WOULD be hard to convince Leatrice Joy that animals have no sense of humor, after an experience she had with a horse on a set in A Most Immoral Lady, her latest starring picture for First National.

In one of the scenes, Miss Joy was called upon to do a canter in a park. Not having seen a horse for several months, owing to her extended vaudeville tour, Leatrice naturally felt the effects of her ride. Next day she limped painfully onto the set and was forced to listen to much kidding from her fellow actors.

She didn't mind that, but when the horse she had been riding emitted a loud neigh, it was more than she could stand.

Cliff's Question

BUSTER KEATON'S press agent was explaining how the artist worked out his gags.

"You see, he takes chess men and moves them about from different angles. If they bump into each other they naturally fall down."

Cliff Edwards was listening attentively and when the press agent reached that point, said, "Yeh, I understand that, but how does he arrive at a fancy flop?"

Accommodating

EDMUND LOWE was watching Lilyan Tashman do one of her famous vamping characterizations on a set on Tin Pan Alley recently, when a man standing on the sidelines exclaimed:

"Gee, that Tashman is a gorgeous blonde. I could love a woman like that. Wonder if she would take dinner with me?"

Alan Hale's parrot seems to have language habits that shock this exceedingly popular Pathé player, but one wonders just where the parrot learned the tough stuff. They've even got parrots in the talkies, now!

"Well, she never refused to eat with me," answered Lowe.

"Oh, then you know her," said the other. "Do me a favor, old man. Introduce me."

"Sure," said Eddie. "Anything to save a dollar. I intended to take her out to eat, but I can do that any time. Lil's my wife, you know."

Lively Conversation

KEN MAYNARD was having a little heated argument with an employe of the Universal Studios.

"I'm a star," said Maynard. "You can't talk to me like that."

"Well," said the other, "I'm not a star but I didn't have to get a horse to support me."

That remark put Maynard into a fighting mood.

"Say, you," he threatened, "you'd better not get me angry! Just remember I always win my fights."

"So I see by your pictures," said the other man.

The Difficulty

BUDDY ROGERS was sitting on a stump on the location set. Mary Brian was in a like position but on the other side of the set.

A friend spoke to Buddy. "Well, pal, what's the meaning of this? I thought you were thick with Mary."

"Nope," said Buddy.

"Now, come, come, don't give up so easily; maybe you didn't use enough sugar."

"Yes, I did," said Buddy, "but the darn thing won't jell."

Clara Emerges

CLARA BOW'S engagement to Harry Richman seemingly has brought her out of her hermit life. She's appearing in public almost every day now, clinging to Harry's arm. It used to be that Clara always kept pretty much to herself, entertaining her friends either at her Beverly Hills home or at her beach home in the Malibu. But now she's apparently changed her mind. Since the engagement became public, she has been seen any number of times on the boulevard, at the Montmartre and at the Roosevelt Hotel dinner dance. The natives and tourists are getting quite a kick out of seeing her since she gave up her secluded life.

Canine Costs

JAMES HALL has decided it's about time to quit being too good a friend to friends. It's much too costly, he says. Jimmie is a lover of dogs. He started out with a valuable black wire haired fox terrier. His friends learned he liked dogs and was good to them. First thing he knew somebody presented him with a blooded police dog. It's a huge one. The police dog and the terrier are great pals. Jimmie thought that was great. Then another friend went broke and heard about Jimmie and his two dogs. The friend had a huge Great Dane. Jimmie took it. All was well until he got his bill from the meat market. Now he's trying to get rid of the dogs—that is, the police dog and the Great Dane.

The "Billboard" was seventy-five feet high, and erected on a busy Los Angeles corner. Each letter spelling "Hollywood Revue" was constructed of lumber five feet high and stood out from the board some four feet, so that the top of each character was a miniature dancing platform, and on top of each a girl pirouetted. Girls appearing in the revue itself were employed in the unique sign, which blocked traffic and was watched by

AND THIS IS PARIS!

A new department telling what goes on among members of the American film colony sojourning in Gay Paree.

By COUNTESS JOSEPHINE de CHILLY

Pola Negri and her divorced husband, Prince Serge M'Divani, said good-bye and parted friends, after two years of married life.

Jascha Heifetz, noted violinist, and his wife, Florence Vidor, were guests of honor at a recent dinner party given on the River Seine.

PARIS, FRANCE.

POLA NEGRI, after filing a petition in the Paris courts for divorce from Prince Serge M'Divani, her Georgian husband, went off to Elstree, England, to make a picture, whence come rumors of a new and positively lamb-like Pola. No more temperamental explosions! Perhaps too much temperament caused the divorce; for while both declare they are parting friends, they admit marriage was just a little bit difficult. They were wed near Paris, at Serincourt, about two years ago.

Rudolph Valentino's widow, Madame Natacha Rambova, was here designing costumes for the first American Opera produced in Paris, A Light From St. Agnes. The American colony treated this opera like a family party (several local American musicians being in the cast) and numerous parties were given.

Loads of cinema and near-cinema people have been through here lately. The near-cinema ones are those artists of other fields newly caught in the snares of the sound-film and talkie. Irving Berlin, who has composed the music for Mammy, a talkie to be played by Al Jolson (whose Jazz Singer is having a long successful run here on the boulevards) rushed through Paris on his way to the Lido.

WE ARE wondering on this side whether Norman Kerry's divorce decree—due to take effect in a year—will stand or fall.

He arrived here hatless, so to speak, after his sensational leap aboard the same boat that bore his ex-wife to Europe, just as the liner steamed out of the harbor. Hopes that he was catching up with a reconciliation were dashed, however, when he told the Paris reporter who met the boat, that that wasn't what he came for. Peggy Joyce stood beside him while he made this declaration.

A wonderful party was given here for Florence Vidor, with her husband, the famous violinist, Jascha Heifetz, and the Edsel Fords (son and daughter-in-law of the great Henry) as co-honorees. The hosts were Mr. and Mrs. Jules Glaenzer, who took nearly a hundred guests to dinner down the Seine, on a bateau mouche as far as the Pêche Miraculeuse (Miraculous Fishing—or Miraculous Peach, you can translate it, if you're with a pretty girl)!

Exploring Ronald Colman's

What sort of life does Hollywood's male sphinx lead? Why has his haven of bachelorhood been kept mysterious? SCREEN SECRETS tells its readers what goes on behind the high white plaster wall, hedged with ragged red geraniums, that guards his house.

By DOROTHY SPENSLEY

Ronald Colman gazes across the patio cubierto of his part-Mexican-part-Spanish home, while the world wonders what the interior of his house looks like.

THERE is a mystery about Ronald Colman embodied in his famous "unseen house". Entrance is forbidden to those outside his fraternity of friends; the privacy of the Colman domicile is as sacred as are the cities of Tibet.

There is nothing belligerent about Colman's attitude concerning his inviolate castle. It is merely steadfast and British. He has no inexplicable aversion to entertaining the fourth estate at his home. No, not that. Colman merely holds some things sacred. Among them is his home. He doesn't want it cluttered with prying eyes and ears. He prefers privacy and he means just that.

It was knowing just what he wanted that compelled Colman to search long and mightily two years ago when he decided to move from his Manhattan street home in the well-tenanted Wilshire district of Los Angeles. He wanted a house with sufficient grounds on which to lay out a tennis court. He found it after hunting for weeks. He found a little eight-room house on the side of a hill, bought it, and immediately started to remodel it. Incidentally, and to dispel a popular rumor, he did not buy Norma Shearer's home which she vacated to become Mrs. Irving Thalberg.

Richard Barthelmess, Clive Brook and William Powell are frequent visitors of Colman's and are considered his most intimate friends.

I HAVE seen his house—been his guest there—and the privilege seems almost too great to be true, because of the impossibility of anyone outside Ronald Colman's select coterie ever gaining access to the little house on the hill.

Ronald Colman is the most affable of persons to know He has, gathered about him, a small and select circle of friends, each of whom plays a good game of tennis. Indeed, anyone at first knowledge of Colman might think that tennis was the prime requisite of intimate friendship with him. This is not true. Nor is it true that the next requirement is that of English birth, although many of the persons who gather for a dish of tea on the grassy terrace overlooking the tennis court, first saw light of day under the Union Jack.

"Yes, it is nice here in Hollywood," said Ronald, his words coming forth close-cropped and terse, "if you are an actor. I can imagine no better place to live when you are in this profession. Of course, if you were a writer, a painter, a sculptor, it would be different."

'Unseen Home' in Hollywood

"Where then would you want to live?"

"Oh—along the coast of Italy, perhaps," drawing on a cigarette. "In China. Egypt. God knows where. You could move from place to place."

Not a malcontent, Colman, but a man who knows what he wants, and, under existing circumstances, gets it. Seldom has he to suffer compensations. It was that way with this house, far up in the Hollywood hills, on a little street that runs up the spine of a small mound. A street that ends there. Perhaps it dies of sheer joy, happy to have been of service to Colman. At any event, it is seldom trespassed by tourists because it is guarded by a sign that says "Not a Through Street."

Across from Colman's part-Mexican-part-Spanish home, Janet Gaynor lives in a little white frame building. There are not more than five other houses on the hill. At night, the lights of Los Angeles and Hollywood spread themselves out, glowingly, for Colman's consideration. He can see a glittering carpet of them from his sleeping room on the second floor of his white plaster house.

ONCE inside the door, set with a tiny window through which Tono, his Filipino house boy peers, you can understand Colman's scheme of existence. It is to eradicate, put aside, the outside conflict. He succeeds admirably with the final turning of the

Even his tennis court is screened off from outside view. Colman's favorite pastime is the racquet game.

Colman's hacienda, his little estate, is as indigenous to this semi-tropical country as are the palms outside the door, and the pepper trees and the tall, waving, odorous eucalypti. He would much rather play tennis than swim; so, there is no swimming pool. His property is just so many square feet of perfection: an Eden without an Eve.

A SINGING HEART

Cliff Edwards was a waiter when he started picking on a ukulele. He changed his name to Ukelele Ike and soon he rose from slinging hash to crooning for cash—and a movie career.

By CLIFFORD RANDALL

When Cliff Edwards was fourteen, he worked from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m., singing twenty songs a day for $4 a week.

HE USED to sling hash in one-armed lunch rooms for $16 a week.

Today he serves hot melody for more money than he knows he makes.

Cliff Edwards is his name. You know him better as Ukelele Ike, a born troubador who has absolutely no illusions and delusions and takes fame and fortune with a Great Neck horselaugh.

Amazing, the gigantic success of this crooning ballader who used to warble torch songs to drunks in night dives, paint freight cars, sell newspapers, peddle magazine subscriptions, demonstrate nasal humanatones and play trap drums.

Consider this bland-faced minstrel man singing seventy-one phonograph records in three years and setting a sales bumper crop with 11,000,000 records sold!

And for each and every record sold he has collected three cents apiece royalty, in addition to a singing fee of $1,000 per record—which, if you want to figure it up, runs mighty close to $1,000,000.

Today, Cliff has deserted the stage for the movies and is struggling along making whoopee in talkies for a weekly check that has three 0's printed thereon. And this in addition to phonograph earnings.

Owens, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer gateman, struggles with and tries to prevent Ukelele Ike from taking his constant companion with him on a sound set.

To the world at large, Ukelele Ike was more or less obscure until he began making records about six years ago, when his quaint manner of "selling" songs attracted attention on the stage.

His first record was Old Fashioned Love and My Lovey Came Back. He clicked right off the bat.

Ukelele Ike records were the rage. Hundreds of songsters began—and still do—to imitate his clarinet vocal register and hey-heying.

He made June Night and sold 1,200,000 of that issue alone. It Had To Be You polled 800,000. Somebody Loves Me registered 500,000 and Red Hot Mamma hit in the neighborhood of 1,000,000.

CLIFF was born in Hannibal, Missouri, of German-Irish parentage. Poverty sent him out on the streets of St. Louis, when he was ten years old, to sell newspapers. He was a tough urchin who would just as soon fight as sing—and he loved to sing. He had practically no schooling, but was trained in the painting trade at a car shop where he later worked.

When he was fourteen, Cliff got himself a job singing for illustrated slides and playing trap drums in the People's Palace. He worked from 11:00 a. m. to 11:00 p. m., singing twenty songs a day. He got $4 a week and he was glad to get it.

All day long he sang Just Plain Folks, Take Me Out For a Joy Ride, Mother Machree and Just Break the News to Mother. Then when he got back to his room he'd sing some more for his own amusement. He still does.

Between scenes you will find him in his dressing room, singing and spanking his trusty ukulele for no other reason than because he enjoys it. He has a singing heart.

Ukelele Ike strums a few bars of melody for Bessie Love, while her pooch looks on approvingly. Ike and Bessie appear in The Hollywood Revue of 1929.

THE Electric Theater in St. Charles, Missouri, was Cliff's second theatrical venture and by that time he was badly bitten. Things at home weren't so helpful to the boy's ambitions, so he climbed the rods of a freight train and landed with Patterson's Carnival at Waco, Texas, selling cider and humanatones—musical atrocities that are blown through one's nose—remember?

He hit Cleveland for the winter and peddled his humanatone stock in a department store during the Christmas holidays. He went broke and decided to be a movie actor because he looked like a slapstick comic he saw working for Johnny and Emma Ray in their Cleveland movie factory. He worked for nine months at their plant and then found himself looking for work again when the studio gave up the ghost and expired without benefit of payrolls.

Ike again hit the rods and caught his first sight of New York from the Grand Central freight yards. He rang doorbells with magazine subscriptions and then went to work at Thompson's lunch-room in the heart of the theatrical district on Broadway, because eating was more certain in such a job.

Cliff has since sipped a mug of coffee in this same restaurant and looked across the street to the Ziegfeld Follies, where his name blazed in electric lights.

Chicago next saw Cliff. Broke again. He found that Thompson's also operated in Chicago, so he went back to hash slinging until he landed a job singing in the Federal Inn for $20 a week.

Cliff Edwards "goes Italy," stepping out of his Ukelele Ike character into that of Marie, in M-G-M's gigantic and spectacular attraction, The Hollywood Revue of 1929.

IN SOME unknown manner, Cliff drifted into a quartet as a tenor and went on the road. It was in this company that he discovered his freak voice.

Seems that the leading lady of the troupe sang Auld Lang Syne and the quartet followed by singing it all jazzed up. Clowning on performance, Cliff discovered he could make all sort of strange noises and warble a high falsetto at the same time.

It also was in this show that Cliff first was introduced to the ukulele he has made more famous than all the Hawaiians put together. He picked one up in his dressing room and began to strum it. He never had a lesson. It just seems to have come naturally to him.

After this show, Cliff went back to torch singing in the Arsonia in Chicago, wheeling about a little piano after the band went home and jerking tears from the maudlin members of the party

Mr. Carr has the best motion picture background of anyone writing about the movies today. Besides conducting a column for The Los Angeles Times, Mr. Carr has received screen credit for such masterpieces as Old Ironsides, Wedding March and The Divine Lady. His comments appear only in SCREEN SECRETS, among fan magazines.

THE grandest sight in Hollywood is Mr. Stepin Fetchit, the colored actor coming to his daily toil.

There are other actors who steam up in a spiffy car, while the gate-keeper salaams to the ground. Stepin Fetchit drives up in two spiffy cars.

He adorns a high-bred roadster in person—all dressed up in an aviator's helmet. Behind him rolls an empty limousine driven by a chauffeur who wears a uniform as overwhelming as a South American admiral. If it is by night, all the lights in the limousine are blazing; it looks like an ocean liner going by. He used to drive the leading car in the procession himself, but his method was too impetuous for the police and so they took away his driver's license.

The Old Griffith

GRIFFITH has come back from New York with all kinds of plans for stage plays in the movies and the distinct possibility of Carol Dempster coming back to the screen.

If I had anything to do with his plans, he would go back to his old time thrillers with the villain chasing the young lady around the room and the cavalry galloping to the rescue.

Recently, Russia employed a great Swedish psychologist to analyze the reactions of movie audiences. He turned them inside out—heart and soul. His report to the government as to what movies ought to be, sounds exactly as though he were describing a Griffith play.

Diet

TWO Hollywood doctors of my acquaintance have given up their summer vacations. They have read about the number of girls who are taking this Eighteen-day Diet and they do not mean to be out of the market when the prospect of patients is so good. They predict that about half the screen world will be laid up with sick tum-tums.

Lupe Raised Her Nose

OUR unterrified little friend, Lupe, has given the colony another severe shock. At a midnight performance at the Warners Brothers Theater, Lupe was called upon for a stunt by a master of ceremonies who swears by the Great Horn Spoon that he didn't know what was going to happen.

Lupe said she would give an imitation of a couple of fellow artistes. She first showed how the luscious if excitable Jetta Goudal used to come on the sets at the Griffith studio with her nose very much in the air. Then she gave an imitation of the imperial Señorita Dolores Del Rio, that startled the audience with its audacity.

The Ride Actor

JOHN STAHL has dug up an all but forgotten face. There was a day when Gareth Hughes was one of the biggest cards in pictures. Barrie's Sentimental Tommy was his high note and his swan song. He made a fortune in Hollywood real estate and retired. Being a very blasé and world-weary young man, he just couldn't figure himself getting up early enough in the morning to bother about a picture career.

Stahl had to hold out many inducements to get him to take a part in Leo Carrillo's Mister Antonio. But I think the real bait was Ling.

David Wark Griffith is planning to produce New York stage plays for the talkies, says Harry Carr.

PRIVATE LINE

FROM THE INSIDE

His Pal—Ling

LING is Leo Carrillo's dresser and valet. At one time, however, he was also a professional gentleman. He was the Chink who dangled over the heads of the audience at the old Hippodrome in New York, hanging by his queue on a wire. One day the wire or his tresses played him false, and he fell, breaking his legs.

Ling and the cultured Mr. Hughes are inseparable pals. If Ling is shooting sevens or elevens, it is a matter of despair on the part of the assistant director to try to get Gareth on the set.

Leo's Dream

LEO, by the way, is about to witness the fulfillment of one of his dreams. He comes of an old California family which has played a great part in history since the days of the conquistadores. The old estate was a rancho that included all the land where Santa Monica now stands.

Leo has bought part of it back and is building an old-style California ranch-house. He has named it "El Ranchito de Los Alisos" (the little ranch of the sycamore trees). He has made a will in which he leaves this ranch to the poor Mexicans and Spanish people of California to be used by them for holding their barbecues.

The two of us have made a compact to boil in oil the next guy who calls him Mr. Car-ill-o. His name is pronounced "Car-reel-yo."

How to Say Them

John Arnold, M-G-M cameraman, uses the mixing panel to iron out Renee Adoree's almost imperceptible French accent—and she listens in on the results.

DOC GENIUS has issued his monthly bulletin on the progress of the convalescence of Crown Prince Talkie, the next ruler of Cinemaland. It reads: "Improvement in the condition of the patient has been so marked in the last six months, that I am authorized to announce that King Silent Film, due to old age and general debility, plans to abdicate in favor of his son, early in 1930."

So Movieland rejoices. The kingdom is safe.

Turn back the pages for a minute.

Had Alice White informed her friends a year ago that she could sing, they would have laughed heartily.

Had Victor McLaglen, he with the English accent, announced he would play the rôle of an American slang-tosser, he would have been booed.

Had Raymond Griffith, who suffered a throat affliction and long since has spoken only in a whisper, confided that he planned to stage a great comeback because of the tie-up of sound and shadow, he might have been rushed off to the psychopathic ward.

BUT times have changed in the movie industry. No longer does the squeak and squawk of the talkies irritate the nervous system of the audience to the point where theater-goers pray for the return of silent pictures. No longer does the inclusion of dialogue and sound slow up the films to a point where they are uninteresting.

If the part fits some beautiful young actress who has been trained in the art of pantomime rather than in elocution, it matters not. The recording apparatus can be so manipulated that she can play her rôle without alienating the affections of her fan following. Should the story call for a cross-country dash by cowboys or the filming of an auto chase, it can be done, and with sound, too.

Yes, the talkies have taken to walking. Their creeping days are only a memory.

The master magician of modern sorcery is the "sound mixer." He is a veritable "sleight-of-voice artist—a demi-god who sits alone at a mixing table in a tiny enclosure on the sound-proof stage, peering out at the set and the actors through tri-paned windows.

At his fingertips, as he twists the dials that control the microphones, is the destiny of each and every player who has a line to speak in the production.

complaint, Old Doc Genius steps right up to up—so is broken English—in short, Crown occupy his throne as King of Movieland.

THE sound mixer is a new figure in the operation of the picture-making plants. Only recently has he come into being, for he is the recording technician assigned to every film and it is his job to see that the voices and sounds are properly registered on film or disc.

He derives his cognomen, mixer, from the fact that he sits at an instrument board with from six to twelve dials, each connected with a mike, so that he can increase or decrease the power of a speaker's voice, as he sees fit.

And it is this same sound mixer who makes a singer of Alice White, who soft pedals Victor McLaglen's accent, and who puts power and tone into Raymond Griffith's whisper! Voice doubles have passed into the discard in the Hollywood factories since the movie-makers began hiring "sound mixers" away from the radio broadcasting stations.

And working as a close ally of the mixer is the film cutter, who, in the old days, was nothing more than a cog in the big technical wheel, but who, with the dawn of the talkies, has found his place in the sun. Should the mixer err, the cutter comes to the rescue.

Between the two, it no longer is necessary to remake entire scenes or sequences because of a mispronounced or misplaced word.

Norma Shearer takes a trip to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sound department to watch and listen to her own voice on one of the recording discs.

ALICE WHITE is a tiny bit of humanity and her voice is as small as her physique. As for singing lessons—well, Alice studied stenography.

Little wonder that movie magnates gazed at one another in amazement when First National chiefs announced that Alice would be starred in an all-dialogue version of Broadway Babies.

"Must be going to use a double on the songs," suggested one.

But those who doubted hadn't taken into consideration the fact that anyone can sing if he does not go in for volume. Then, too, word of the newly discovered powers of the gentleman known as the mixer had not yet spread to all corners of Hollywood.

Alice did sing. In fact, she sang right into the ear of the hidden microphone.

The strength of her voice was increased by juggling the keys on the mixer's desk.

A few short months ago no producer would have thought of casting Raymond Griffith in a talking picture. That is, not unless they expected to let Raymond, a finished actor, go through the motions, while

At fifteen, Leatrice Joy decided to become a motion picture actress—today she has accomplished that—and vaudeville and talking picture stardom besides!

By RUTH BIERY

A YOUNG girl of fifteen stood on the veranda of her comfortable home in New Orleans, contemplating the future which was beckoning. She turned to her typically southern, home-loving mother and said, quietly, "I am going to be an actress, a motion picture actress!"

Her mother looked up from the bedspread she was piecing together and registered her inherited feminine indignation. That evening, the girl's grandmother, her father, her relatives and neighbors reiterated and re-emphasized the words of her mother.

"Southern girls don't work for a living—

"Women of culture marry and make homes for fine Southern children—

"Only one girl out of a million ever makes a success of acting—"

"But I am that one girl and I am going to make a success," retorted the girl. The girl was Leatrice Joy.

Two months later she was working for the Nola Films Company, in New Orleans. The fact that she talked French like a native secured a small part she was playing

IT WAS while making that very first picture that I met John Gilbert," she said. "He played the part of a gardener. I shall never forget what Marcia Manon said about him even then. He was so young and yet so cynical, so bitter about pictures and his work in them.

Preparedness has always been the watchword of Leatrice Joy. Once in motion pictures, she studied voice—then came the talkies—and Leatrice polished up a bit with a vaudeville tour, practicing tap dancing. Her first talkie part called for a tap dancing bit—so again the reward of preparedness has been success. Even in matrimony, Leatrice was prepared for contingencies. Married early in her career to John Gilbert, she refused to leave the screen, because, she says, "To keep my work meant that I would always be prepared to be independent."

Walter Pidgeon and Leatrice Joy, in the two principal rôles in the picture, celebrate their reunion in the final scenes of A Most Immoral Lady.

Accomplishment

Marcia said she would like to give him a good spanking.

IT WAS during the making of Bunty Pulls the Strings that we were married. Baby Leatrice is four and a half, but since I am Vitaphoning, I call her four. I have always refused to talk about John. When things are past in life, it is better to say nothing." (Leatrice Joy and Florence Vidor!—two Southern women who have consistently restrained from discussing their matrimonial ventures).

"I never gave up my professional life while I was married to John," Leatrice continued. "I believe that women who make money, whether it be in pictures or other work, learn automatically to be the head of their families. My mother was ill for a long period, so I had become the one responsible for her.

"Ask Lois Wilson or any number of others. It would not have been fair to have asked John to shoulder my responsibilities. He was a young actor, struggling. Besides, to keep my work meant that I would always be prepared to be independent.

BUT how different, how different! I went with John to the opening of The Big Parade in New York, after we were divorced—I married him when he was just beginning!"

"Do you know Greta Garbo? What is she like?"

For several minutes we discussed—or, rather, I talked of—Miss Garbo. Leatrice had never met her. She made no comment. It didn't seem necessary. But my heart seemed to reach out and grasp her's with a clasp of understanding. Not one question did she ask about Ina Claire.

While waiting for her cue to go on the stage, during her recent vaudeville tour, this Joy of Joys applied herself to mastering the intricacies of tap dancing.

It was just ten years after her start in pictures that Leatrice Joy one night was waiting her cue to go on the stage of a Minneapolis theater. While waiting, she was practicing tap dancing, under the tutelage of one of the other vaudeville performers.

"Why are you doing that?" a visiting editor inquired.

"To be prepared. You can't tell when they'll want to hear my feet as well as my voice in the talkies. I'm one little gal who's going to be ready for anything," explained the lovely Leatrice.

Two months later she signed with First National for four pictures, one of which required tap dancing.

I wondered, when the editor told me about the tap dancing and Leatrice told me of herself as a young girl and her declaration to her mother about being a movie actress—if the Leatrice Joy as a girl could have forseen her future as Leatrice Joy, the woman—if youth could have glimpsed the failures and the successes, the

CUPID'S BULLETIN

¶ The chubby little God of Love punctures Hollywood hearts.

FRANCES MARION, scenarist at M-G-M, and widow of the late Fred Thomson, is rumored engaged to George Hill, director on the same lot. Friends of the pair say they're to be wed several months hence, but Miss Marion is noncommittal.

"Maybe we will. We've known each other for seventeen years," was Mr. Hill's reply when asked if he and Miss Marion would walk to the altar.

Anita Stewart Marries

I TRIED it once before, when I was only eighteen. This time I'm older, twenty-eight, and I think my judgment is better. I do hope it takes."

So said Anita Stewart when she filed her declaration of intent to wed George P. Converse, New York banker.

The couple were married recently at the Chateau Elysee, home of many film stars, by Reverend James H. Lash, who officiated at the marriage of Constance Talmadge to Townsend Netcher. Lucille Stewart, sister of the bride, acted as matron of honor. The couple left shortly afterwards on their honeymoon trip.

Sue's Way of Announcing

SUE CAROL chose the simplest way to announce her engagement to Nick Stuart. She wore the beautiful square-cut diamond ring which Nick had given her several months ago, to the studio the other day, and the secret was out.

"We are ready to make it known now," Sue said.

No plans have been made as yet for the wedding, which will probably not take place for several months.

Eaton-Webb Engagement

MILLARD WEBB, First National director, and Mary Eaton, stage actress who plays the lead in Glorifying the American Girl, have glorified each other by announcing their engagement.

Wedding bell chimes must be held in abeyance, however, since their work will keep them apart for several months, but they're surely going to ring, according to statements from Mr. Webb and his betrothed.

Untying the Bow

AFTER only eight months of married life, Tui Lorraine, one-time motion picture actress, has announced her intention to file suit for divorce from Robert Bow, father of the noted Clara.

The couple were secretly married last September, after a whirlwind courtship. The young woman, only twenty-one, had been employed as Clara's secretary, and it was through his daughter that Bow, forty-eight, met Miss Lorraine.

Paging Miss Allis

SIX years ago, Paul Page, one of the stage importations brought west by Fox, and Ethel Allis, eastern actress, played opposite each other in many ardent love scenes. The years have convinced them that they would do well to carry these sentiments into their private lives, so recently they took a day off and were married.

Crawford-Ruggles Romance

IT IS rumored that one of Hollywood's most eligible bachelors is about to succumb to the wiles of Kathryn Crawford. Wesley Ruggles is the gentleman's name, and he is devoting all the time he can spare from his directorial duties, to squiring Miss Crawford to all the Hollywood festivities.

Doris Arbuckle Engaged

WHILE there's nothing official about it yet, so far as an announcement is concerned, everybody is saying, and nobody is denying, that it is likely that when Doris Arbuckle, Fatty's wife, wins her divorce, she will marry Lieutenant Victor Bertrandias.

Already she is wearing a platinum and diamond slave bracelet on her ankle. Inside is the legend, "To my love pilot." The bracelet is decorated with the wings of the Aviation Corps.

Lieut. Bertrandias holds a fine position in the aviation service of the United States, having served during fourteen years.

A Greater Rio Rita

Hollywood caps its many raids on Broadway talent with the enlistment of Ziegfeld musical directors, song writers, chorus trainers and dialogue writers—to produce a dazzling screen version of one of the Broadway impresario's best bets.

By HARMONY HAYNES

Robert Woolsey, the dressed-in-white fellow with his mouth open, is one of the comedy hits of RKO's singing extravaganza. And the charming background in this picture is a mere hint of the colorful company in Rio Rita.

John Boles sings an inspired tenor to the warm contralto of lovely Bebe Daniels. Rio Rita is Bebe's first talking picture—and what a decided hit she makes!

ONE of the greatest blows to Broadway's stage shows has been Hollywood's procedure of recruiting actors for the talkies, but now comes another series of raids which threatens to put Mr. Ziegfeld and other theatrical impresarios out of business.

Musical directors, song writers, chorus trainers and dialogue writers for New York's finest productions, are now on Hollywood payrolls. In Rio Rita, RKO's all-talking, all-musical extravaganza, the picture-going public will not only see the film version of a Flo Ziegfeld success, but several erstwhile mainsprings of the Ziegfeld organization will be enlisted by RKO to out-Ziegfeld Ziggy.

On location on the desert in the Rio Grande country, with gigantic mess, wardrobe, hospital and recreation tents to make life fairly tolerable, a company sufficient in numbers to populate a good-sized town set to work in a temperature hovering around 117 degrees to outdo all previous efforts of competing companies in producing a musical delight.

THERE is John Boles in the lead—he who sang so magnificently in The Desert Song. And the dark, sultry beauty, Bebe Daniels, newly-born to the talkies with a voice as dark and rich as her beauty, forsakes whirlwind comedy at last and comes into her own with the feminine lead opposite Boles in this picture.

Colorful? Rio Rita has splashes of gorgeous reds and blues and yellows and oranges and greens—enough brilliant colors to make a rainbow look dull and drab in comparison.

Victor Baravalle, formerly Florenz Ziegfeld's musical director, has the same position in the RKO organization—

A Gift of the Stage

Ann Harding occupied the topmost pinnacle on the legitimate stage when the microphone beckoned—now she's one of the big hits of the talkies.

By HELEN STARR

ANN HARDING'S voice is being captured on film and disc, so that the world may hear this marvelous personality of the footlights. Miss Harding has created havoc among stage critics; she has fairly dazzled them by her brilliance—and now she has gone talkie, with the world waiting to hear her.

"These talkies are so refreshing," says this famous trouper. "On the stage your job is never done; you finish one performance only to do the same thing over again, but there's a satisfying finality about the pictures.

"A career—any kind of a career—is impossible without discipline," says Ann Harding.

It is difficult to associate anything strict with natural blond hair and large blue eyes. Miss Harding is one of a very few stars who still lets her hair grow to its natural luxuriant waistline length. And she is positively the only star on stage or screen who has never allowed a curling iron to touch her locks. She wears her hair straight, parting it in the center as Vilma Banky, Lillian Gish, Camilla Horn and Greta Garbo have

NOT FOR PUBLICATION

Jobyna Ralston's popularity started waning when she started talking about her love for her husband, Richard Arlen; she still loves Dick, but she's ceased talking about it—for publication!

By ANNE HOWE

MANY of Hollywood's most famous young ladies will admit, if pressed for the truth, that they talked their way to success in the movies. For instance—

There's the Hoboken brunette who adopted an accent and crashed the gates in the guise of a graduate of the Moscow Art Theatre.

There's the Sauk Centre red-head who got her start by convincing the casting office that she taught Clara Bow the meaning of the word "IT."

There's the Dubuque blonde who was lifted from the extra ranks to featured rôles because she "yessed" a famous director.

There's . . . But why go on? The list of those who reached the heights with loquacity as their ladder is almost without end. Then, too, this is not the story of a girl who won by the chinning method. Instead, it is the tale of one who got within an arm's length of stardom through sheer hard work, only to talk herself into obscurity!

Her name is Jobyna Ralston.

THE passing of the little Southern girl from the celluloid firmament is one of the greatest of all Hollywood tragedies. She is paying the price for sincerity in a town where it is tinsel, rather than gold, that glitters. Jobyna preached of love. Crucifixion was the penalty meted out to her.

Players have waxed rich in glory and currency by portraying sweetheart rôles on the screen. But in real life they must love only their public. The fans refuse to share the affections of their favorites.

Many a feminine star has gone on to greater popularity after marriage. But she remained mum about it after she tripped to the altar with the man of her dreams. She spoke of her career, of her art—of everything except her husband. She loved him, no doubt. But she didn't herald the fact.

Jobyna, on the other hand, believed love the greatest thing that could come to her. She married her "man in a million." As Mrs. Richard Arlen she was supremely happy.

So why not let the world know? Jobyna answered the question with action. She broadcast the news that Cupid finally had succeeded in Hollywood after many, many failures.

"I am the happiest girl on earth," she would tell interviewers. "Dick is the most wonderful man that ever lived."

Jobyna Ralston reaches for the brake as her hubby, Dick Arlen, steps on the bicycle pedals back in their own back yard.

It was one of those real life dramas with a kiss at the final fadeout. But in this case, I don't believe it could be called a happy ending.

TWO years ago I met Jobyna in the Montmartre. She had been married to Dick Arlen only six months before.

During the hour that we sat together over the luncheon table, I tried to draw from her something of her plans for her future in pictures, but I was unable to switch her from the topic of the newly-found bliss. Summed up, Jobyna's entire conversation amounted only to: "Ain't love grand?"

I assured her it must be if she felt that way about it.

Charles Farrell's

Charles Farrell perches himself in the "hammock tree," on the grounds of his home, and takes life easy.

Charlie Farrell has just three more years of single life, and then—in 1932—he's going to marry! Where in these United States is the girl of his dreams—who combines the most attractive attributes of six noted screen stars?

WHEN he is thirty—that's three years hence—Charles Farrell will dive into the sea of love, pick the mermaid who comes nearest to matching the mental picture of his dream girl, and swim for the altar!

At the age of thirty-one, he hopes to be a proud parent.

And if, when he attains forty, he has a family of ten to feed, he will be the world's happiest human.

Charlie knows well this ideal girl who will some day be Mrs. Farrell. He has, I discovered, devoted a great deal of thought to the lady.

She has the hair and nose of Virginia Valli.
She has the eyes of Janet Gaynor.
She has the mouth and teeth of Clara Bow.
She has the chin of Mary Pickford.
She has the figure of Billie Dove.

AND that's not all Charlie can tell you about this dream person of his.

She has the charm and sweetness of Janet, plus the disposition and poise of Virginia, plus the loyalty of Mary. Into this mixture has been stirred the sense of humor of Colleen Moore.

There you have Charlie's word painting of the lady who will be the mother of his ten children!

Charlie has had only one love affair in his deep, dark past. It was a "puppy" romance during his school days in the old home town—a romance long since forgotten.

Since coming to Hollywood seven years ago, Charlie has gone about with two girls, but the question of love and marriage has not entered into either of these friendships.

The two young women whose companionship he has enjoyed in Cinematown are Janet and Virginia. Rumor has had him engaged to both at various times.

But Charlie has a reason for waiting three more years before asking any one to wed him.

Billie Dove's figure represents Charlie's idea of bodily perfection and is one of the requirements of his dream girl.

Dream Girl

As Revealed to BOB MOAK

Janet Gaynor's beautiful brown eyes hold a charm and a sweetness to the discriminating Mr. Farrell.

Virginia Valli's hair and nose—also her poise and disposition—are parts of Charlie's dream girl.

Charles Farrell's dream girl must have a mouth and teeth like exuberantly magnetic Clara Bow's.

Mary Pickford's attractive chin—and her sense of loyalty—must be part of the future Mrs. Farrell.

MARRIAGE is a state into which two persons enter partnership for the balance of their natural lives, views of other Hollywoodians notwithstanding," said Charlie. "At least, that is the way I look at it, and I can say here and now that there will be but one marriage for me. That's why I want to be sure of myself, not only for my own good, but for the welfare of the girl who honors me by becoming my wife.

"Some fellows are level-headed enough at twenty-one or twenty-two to pick a bride with whom they can find great happiness, but I'm afraid of my own judgment. I'm sort of a dizzy guy at the best, but I'm improving, and I feel sure that when I am thirty I shall have both feet on the ground and know my own mind."

Charlie admits he prefers brunettes, but he doesn't know just why. He likes the color of and the way Virginia Valli dresses her hair.

"There's a charm and sweetness to those big, soft brown eyes of Janet Gaynor," said Charlie. "A fellow can't help being at his best when he is playing opposite a girl like her in a picture. The greatest effort of my career went into my work in Seventh Heaven and it was Janet's eyes that urged me on."

VIRGINIA VALLI, Charlie will tell you, has poise as well as a marvelous disposition.

"She is quiet, cool and peaceful," he declared. "She has a soothing effect upon everyone with whom she comes into contact. It is restful just to be in Virginia's company."

Mary Pickford, according to Charlie, is one person in Hollywood who never "threw down" a friend.

"Everyone who knows Mary will tell you that she has a sense of loyalty that is most unusual," continued Chico. "The troubles of others become her troubles and she bends her every effort to alleviate them. That would be a remarkable quality to find in a wife.

"Mary also has a wholesomeness or a something that you just can't define. It is noticeable in her films, but it is more noticeable when you see her in person and talk with her.

"I think Colleen Moore has the greatest sense of humor of any girl in pictures—and that's an asset to anyone, either husband or wife."

CHARLIE doesn't care whether Mrs. Farrell-to-be is a college girl or not, as long as she is intelligent and refined. He won't worry about her ability to cook. He would be pleased to find that she was interested in outdoor sports and music. But those are mere details to be found in his ideal.

This, however, is vital:

She must be of a maternal instinct!

"I want a wife and I want children and I'm serious when I say that ten children won't be too many. I'd be willing to make any sacrifice for a big family of my own. There could be no greater happiness in this world for me."

It was then that I reminded Charlie that more than one promising movie career has crashed with marriage.

"I can't believe that the fan public is selfish to the extent that they would lose interest in me as a husband and father," he said. "But if it is true, then I am perfectly willing to retire from the screen. I would rather drive a truck or dig ditches and have a wife and kiddies than be the most popular star who ever lived."

Charlie confided to me that he built his present abode with matrimony in mind, but the fact that the house is completed and in use will not cause him to swerve from his determination to wait three years before getting married. During the interim his mother will preside over its management.

But 1932 promises to be a big year for the American girl!

TAKING THE

This month SCREEN SECRETS visits the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot in its round of the studios to learn what the players must do to keep the microphone happy.

By ALVA LANGDON

—Ruth Harriet Louise.

Bessie Love got in shape for the talkies by cultivating her toes instead of her tongue. That's a tip for all girls with movie aspirations, for dancing ability was Bessie's passport.

DEMOSTHENES with his mouthful of pebbles, practicing enunciation against a crescendo accompaniment of the Aegean surf, didn't face any graver problem than did many of the stars of the silent drama when they first faced the microphone. The only difference, however, was that Demosthenes had a real defect in speech—while the artists of the silent screen soon found, for the most part, that their principal trouble was akin to stage fright.

At the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios it was found that practically every screen player under contract was naturally adapted to talking pictures, or, with a slight preparation, could become so. The preparation mostly was in correction of certain habits in speech, or, in the case of the foreign actor, the matter of accent.

Anita Page solved her problem by going to college. She enrolled at the University of Southern California and took a course in speech from Professor W. R. MacDonald and Dean Ray K. Immel. In her case, it was discovered, she had a perfect natural voice, but had a habit of speaking "high in her head," and knew nothing about breathing correctly. Breathing exercises and training to acquire nasal reasonance and chest tones fitted her for her first talking hit in The Broadway Melody.

Nils Asther, the Swedish actor, faced a different problem; one of accent. He, too, sought the aid of Professor MacDonald. His English vocabulary was good, his voice perfect.

"We had him read lines and speeches," relates Professor MacDonald, "and tabulated all words in which an accent was apparent. Then we coached him on these words, developing in him the habit of pronouncing them in the correct English manner. Finally, this became a habit, and the accented words began to disappear from his conversation. He is still working on this system, which is almost akin to that used to cure stutterers by having them substitute words they don't block on for those that they do."

NORMA SHEARER, whose splendid voice in The Trial of Mary Dugan and The Last of Mrs. Cheney is one of the great arguments that screen players can do as well as stage artists, also prepared for the talkies by study. When the talking picture first came into being, Miss Shearer began practicing to accustom herself to the microphone. Already possessed of a perfect voice and clear enunciation, her preparation was really more mental than vocal—she practiced until familiarity with the microphone overcame any fear of it. In other words, as James Forbes, the playwright, who aided her, says, it was more a case of overcoming stage fright than anything else.

LIONEL BARRYMORE, when talking pictures first came in, voiced a warning to screen players against voice culture, teachers, and the voice schools that began to spring up as by magic in Hollywood. "The voice means little," he said, "but the gray matter and personality behind it is the thing that counts. Lincoln had a very bad speaking voice, but it was sufficient for what he had to say. Joseph Jefferson once remarked that a fine voice ruined more actors than whiskey. Even a bad voice may be interesting with the proper personality behind it."

Barrymore's prediction became startling true, a short time later, when screen actors began to talk into the microphone.

John Gilbert, for instance, made no vocal preparations at all to start his first talking picture, Redemption, and soon found that he did not need any. The principal problem, Gilbert says, is in using the voice in conjunction with pantomime.

"For instance," he said, "I could take a scene that I knew perfectly well how to portray in silent action, and find that by using words I would have a new conception of the scene. I had constantly to figure out a method of portrayal that would use both sight and sound to best advantage—little inflections in speech and little actions that went with it. It proved a fascinating study."

—Ruth Harriet Louise.

Back to school went Anita Page, because she didn't know how to breathe correctly for the talkies. Three months of practice made her an accomplished speaker.

Marion Davies needed no preparation—her natural voice records excellently. In Marianne, her genius for mimicry enables her to speak with a convincing French accent.

Neither Lionel Barrymore nor Conrad Nagel made any preparations for talking pictures, but "jumped in" —and both scored phenomenal successes.

In each case, both men were experienced in both stage and screen work, and knew how to blend the two to advantage.

MARION DAVIES, too, avoided elaborate preliminary study, but went into Marianne with her own voice unchanged by any practice or artificial training—and much of the success of the picture, her director, Robert Z. Leonard, insists, is due to the fact that her voice is absolutely natural.

Joan Crawford, too, went in with her voice au naturel. She had had considerable stage experience before going into pictures.

Bessie Love's preparation was perhaps the most

Pictorial History of Alice White

In this picture, Alice White is decked out proudly in her First Communion Day dress. Alice's parents died when she was very young, leaving her to be brought up by two doting grandparents. Several years after the event depicted here, Alice left her birthplace, Paterson, New Jersey, to attend Roanoke College at Roanoke, Virginia. When she had completed her college education, Alice went to Hollywood, where she worked for two years as a studio script girl, after which she was given her first chance to act.

Telling in pictures how Alice White grew from an orphan waif into the starry-eyed, energetic motion picture celebrity she is today.

Alice White's only companion, when she arrived in Hollywood, five years ago, was Ching-a-ling, her chowchow.

This vibrant little actress went vigorously to work in Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, making her first big hit on the screen, after which she was very much the whole show in Show Girl, Hot Stuff and Broadway Babies. With each successive picture, Alice's popularity grows by leaps and bounds.

"How did you like the show, little boy?"
"Rotten!"
"That's what they all say, the greatest show on earth! Step up folks, and get your tickets! Here's the famous Hal Skelly, who has trouped this broad land in tent shows, medicine shows, vaudeville, and stock. Now he's with Nancy Carroll in the movies! He's seen every burg, every hamlet, in the great United States. Step up and hear his lecture—it's amusing, entertaining, interesting and ed-u-cational!"

By HAL SKELLY

GOOD evening, folks! Now, while my assistant passes down the aisle with D Skelly's Famous Gloom Eradicator and Remedy, one dollar the bottle, let me give you a brief lecture on your native land. I have seen this country from sidedoor Pullmans, over the footlights, from medicine show wagons, and through jail windows. I've just finished making The Dance of Life for Paramount Pictures, with the beautiful Nancy Carroll, and ladies and gentlemen, my education is complete. Let us begin the lecture. Ready with the slides? Here we go!

Davenport, Iowa

This town, since made famous by the Palmer Chiropractic Institute, is the place where a boy of eight, destined to no good end, took his first downward step by appearing behind the footlights, also the scenery, when his parents thought he was safely home in bed. This he accomplished by jumping from nightshirt into pants and sliding down the rain spout in two minutes flat, arriving at the theater just in time to help set up the flats for East Lynne and other current attractions, and arriving at home in time to receive the licking he knew was waiting for him. Ladies and gentlemen, this boy stands before you now.

Denver, Colorado

Whenever I think of Denver, I think of the time I played my first rôle of any importance. The play was The Jolly Musketeers, one of those musical comedies of a mythical kingdom in Europe. I was to play the part of General Boone, for which I was to wear a uniform like that of a doorman at the Roxy. My body was still sprouting in all directions at that time, and had acquired no natural padding of its own. The wardrobe arrived late and immediately upon examination of my uniform I discovered it had been designed for Wait a moment, folks, till I get a little light on a gloomy subject. Yes, sir, here's where I got my start, at Davenport, Iowa, and I cry to think of how my father had me yanked out of a dog and pony show, just when I was beginning to establish a reputation as the boy wonder. But I couldn't be squelched. I was soon acting again.

And now, ladies, gentlemen, and you college boys up in the balcony, here we come to Chicago. Have a shot! This place is chiefly famous as the scene of my second venture in the show business, where I was the hit of the season in The Time, the Place, and the Girl. Janitor, please clean up these rotten tomatoes before the lecture proceeds.

Canada? Oh, yes, Canada. Somehow my memory fails me, but I'm pretty sure I was there. In fact, I remember going there, but the rest is hazy. My finger is now resting on the best bar in Ottawa. I wish it were my instep cuddling the brass rail. Quick, professor, the next slide before I lose control of myself and break down and weep.

And now, the sweetest spot in the Universe—Hollywood! Where scented breezes blow, and the girls are easy to look upon. The sidewalks, folks, are a mile wide, and the streets take a day to cross! Palm trees blossom in every yard, and movie stars can be seen free! Well, well, my audience seems to have gone home!

On Location with The Virginian

Gary Cooper and Mary Brian in a love scene under the great oaks at the Lasky ranch, an ideal setting for this famous Western romance.

FORTY miles from Hollywood, time had been set back forty years. They were making a talking version of The Virginian at the Lasky ranch.

Gary Cooper, as The Virginian, lean as jerked beef, deliberate in speech and movement, practising the road-agent's roll with his six gun . . . Walter Huston, as Trampus, absently twirling his mustache as he sits in the shade with old-time cowboys on the set, discussing the quick draw used by Billy the Kid . . . . Mary Brian and Dick Arlen grinning at the tussle around the horse-trough, where Gene Pallette was getting a ducking. QUIET, please! Victor Fleming, the director, leaps up, eager as a boy for action.

"Get out of town before sunset." That was the order Trampus gave the Virginian. You can see by the shadows the sun is getting low, and Gary has his gun ready for the showdown. The gun duel takes place very close to this spot in the dusty cowtown street.

It's not all work on location, for setting up cameras and "mikes" takes time. Huston and Mary Brian took turns with a bull-whip, trying to get the hang of the cowboy's knack for flipping the lash like a lasso.

He puzzled the fans.

Surprisingly many of the clever entries in the SCREEN SECRETS Cut Puzzle Contest were ruled out because the contestants confused Nils Asther with Johnny Mack Brown. Can you distinguish them from these pictures?

Were you fooled, too?

Did You Guess Right?

WE'RE surprised at you! Out of the thousands of entries in the SCREEN SECRETS cut puzzle contest, nearly a third mistook Nils Asther for Johnny Mack Brown!

Perhaps it was the gym shirt and basketball that Nils carried in his arm in the puzzle picture that started the fans off on the wrong foot, for Johnny Brown is a noted athlete and used to be seen in all the papers carrying a football to victory for his Alma Mater.

Here are pictures of the two gentlemen, for comparison. True, both have the boyish, winning smile, dark hair parted at the side, and quizzical eyebrows. Nils, the Swedish star, has higher cheek bones, however, and his nose is shorter than Johnny's. John is shown above at left, Nils at right.

Another puzzle which caused great consternation in the ranks of contestants and which put a generous number of competitors in the "also ran" class, was the Alice White picture, in the fourth and final set. Nearly 25 per cent of the total number of entries carried Nancy Carroll's name under the IT-y star's portrait.

SEVERAL entries, elaborately prepared, contained mediocre biographies. Others suffered because of misspellings, the most frequent of which was the erroneous spelling of "Mackaill." Nils Asther's last name proved a stumbling block to several contestants, too.

Some entrants tried to make a Scotchman out of the strapping Britisher, Victor McLaglen, by inserting an "a" between the "M" and the "c." Even the famous Gloria Swanson suffered a misspelled last name, while "Chaplin" fooled a number, also.

The Puzzles Solved

FIRST SET

Gloria Swanson, Charles Chaplin, Marion Davies

SECOND SET

Colleen Moore, Dorothy Mackaill, Billie Dove

THIRD SET

Charles Farrell, June Collyer, Victor McLaglen

FOURTH SET

Dorothy Revier, Alice White, Nils Asther.

SINCE the great number of correct entries far surpassed the number of prizes, 110, the judges found it necessary to split hairs on the basis of neatness and excellence of biographies. Several contestants with attractive entries exceeded the limit of 100 words for biographies and so were forced out of the money. Others ruined their chances by ignoring the rule of neatness and submitting puzzles poorly mounted and carelessly put together.

On the whole, however, the cut puzzle contest proved that SCREEN SECRETS readers are an exceedingly clever lot. There were sailboats, miniature stages with lights, dolls, treasure chests, illuminated vanity cases, and scrap books galore. Each entry is being carefully checked by the judges, the biographies must be read, and the final eliminations made before the winners can be announced.

NO PHOTOGRAPH could reveal the ingenuity of some of the offerings. Several were wired for electrical displays, plugging into the light circuit, while one provided its own power plant in the shape of batteries. A novel entry showed each star in the contest represented by a kewpie doll in appropriate dress, the costumes being chosen from the players' most popular rôles.

While elaborate treatment was applied to about 75 per cent of the entries, no preference was accorded these pieces of work except in cases where neatness and excellence of biographies were of equal merit.

Watch for further announcements on this contest in the November SCREEN SECRETS Magazine, on sale, October 10.

WHY I AM MARRYING

There's a sign, "For Sale," on Marian Nixon's little Hollywood bungalow, for Marian has changed her mind about matrimony. The sincerity of Eddie Hillman, wealthy young Chicago sportsman, won "the sweetest girl on the screen."

—Edwin Bower Hesser.

It was love at first sight for Eddie Hillman, and Marian Nixon soon succumbed to his siege for her affections.

THE shades are drawn in the shrub-banked bungalow in Hollywood that used to be home to Marian Nixon. A "For Sale" sign hides the steps that lead to the awning-covered front porch.

Marian has said farewell to the little Spanish place for which she worked and saved that she might have shelter when age would have barred her from the silversheet.

But Marian doesn't have to worry about that now!

When she returns from her honeymoon in Europe, two or three months hence, she will assume her throne as queen of all she surveys in one of Beverly Hill's most pretentious palaces—a millionaire's gift to his bride.

The two homes offer a study in contrasts. So, too, do Marian's two marriages.

Imagine, if you can, this delicate beauty whose quaint charm has won for her the sobriquet of "the sweetest girl in pictures," as the wife of a rough and ready youth whose aim in life was to punch and pummel his fellow humans that some day he might attain a pugilistic championship! Truly this match was an attraction of opposites!

Yet Marian's first matrimonial venture was with Joe Benjamin, erstwhile friend of Jack Dempsey and at the time a leading contender for the world's lightweight crown. And Marian might have remained Mrs. Joe Benjamin, living in the little house she purchased with her own earnings, had not her husband mistaken her for one of those husky lads who stood between him and his prize-ring goal.

It was a marriage destined to destruction as soon as it was negotiated!

But Marian has closed the book on all that. Cupid settled in full when he brought about her introduction to Eddie Hillman, twenty-eight-year-old scion of one of Chicago's oldest and most respected families, owner of five million dollars in his own name and heir to several more, and a polo player of international repute.

Yes, Cupid has paid—and with compound interest, for there's as vast a difference between Joe Benjamin and Eddie Hillman as there is between the Hollywood bungalow and the Beverly Hills mansion!

THERE are two periods in Marian's past that are as nightmares to her—two periods she tries hard to erase from her memories. First, the days when she went hungry between occasional jobs as an extra girl in the studios. The other is that brief space of time when she was Joe Benjamin's wife.

Marian was nineteen when she met Joe, in 1926. A whirlwind courtship, in which the prizefighter swept the young movie actress off her feet, led them, hand in hand, to the parson's door. They parted a few weeks later and Marian won her decree in 1927.

Little wonder that Marian announced, then and there, that she was forever through with matrimony!

But it wasn't long before the gossip factories of Hollywood went into capacity production on rumors.

Marian was engaged to Ben Lyon, the screen star—she would marry Wesley Ruggles, the director—she was going about with Lisgar Greer, wealthy auto dealer.

As each story popped into the open, Marian popped, too. She would knock it cold with formula No. 2-A-19: "I'll never marry again!"

Marian admitted that she liked all three of these young men. Ben used to take her swimming at Santa

Was it an attraction of opposites that drew Marian and Joe Benjamin, prizefighter, into matrimony? Or was it the impulse of youth? Marian was nineteen when she first married.

"Companionship" is the key word to happy marriages, says Marian. She believes Edward Hillman has the understanding that will make their union endure.

CINEMA SLANTS

Robert E. Sherwood
Staff Correspondent for Screen Secrets

Sending his comments for SCREEN SECRETS this month from Vienna, Mr. Sherwood is able to view the Hollywood scene from a distance and observe filmdom, as it were, through the telescope. As a result we can learn from him how American stars look to the Europeans, and his conclusions may surprise you.

No Spik English!

WHEN the talkies came into being, the film producers realized that they were sure to lose the foreign market, and reorganized their business so that they could derive an adequate profit from the sale of their products in the territory of the United States and Canada alone.

They figured that Great Britain, South Africa and Australia would be lost, because the fans there would never accept American accents. France, Germany, South America and other parts of the world would cease entirely to purchase Hollywood's pictures because of the insurmountable barrier of language.

It was figured that each country would make its own talking pictures for its own market in its own language, and that everything would be lovely.

But everything isn't lovely.

In the first place, all the professional patriots in England have been unable to persuade the British fans that they resent the crude noises made by American stars. Hollywood sound films are just as popular throughout the British Empire as Hollywood silent films ever were, and the British producers (who are now making their own talkies) are again having a frightfully hard time of it. They can't seem to convince their own people that they should patronize home industries.

In all the non-English speaking countries one can see and hear evidences of the terrific grip that Hollywood holds upon the cinema audiences of the world. Although the people of these countries find our dialogue films incomprehensible, they still want Hollywood, and will accept no substitute. At this writing, most of the European studios (outside of Germany and Russia) are shut down, because they can find no market for their goods; and the theaters, unable to obtain new silent films from America, are running A Dog's Life, and similar ancient Chaplin masterpieces over and over again.

The situation in Europe is in a woeful mess, and no one seems to know exactly what will come of it.

Perhaps American producers will have to make their talkies in Esperanto, the "universal language" which nobody knows.

Our Edge on Europe

AS ONE who has never been wildly enthusiastic over the standard of artistic excellence maintained in the Hollywood studios, I have often wondered why it was that American films so completely dominated the world.

Foreigners have always told me that this domination was due to the enormous money power of America, with which Europeans couldn't compete. And yet America hasn't been able to corner the automobile market, for all the incalculable wealth of General Motors and Ford. Nor have Hart, Schaffner and Marx and the House of Kuppenheimer been able to corner the men's wear market.

Having seen a great many European pictures—English, German, Swedish, French and Italian—and compared them with the ordinary run of Hollywood celluloid now on view, I have come to the conclusion that there is one principal reason for the amazing popularity of the American product:

Acting.

In this respect, Hollywood does hold a vast advantage.

Imported Talent

IT MIGHT seem foolish to say that American acting leads the world, in view of the fact that so many of Hollywood's foremost stars were foreign born. But most of them were trained in the shadow of the Sierras.

Consider the male actors, among whom are Charlie Chaplin, Emil Jannings, Victor McLaglen, Ronald Colman, Clive Brook, Nils Asther, Reginald Denny, Jean Hersholt, Ramon Novarro, Warner Oland, Joseph Schildkraut, Gilbert Roland, Victor Varconi and, of course, the late Rudolph Valentino.

Among the actresses are Greta Garbo, Dolores Del Rio, Dorothy Mackaill, Pola Negri, Renée Adorée, Baclanova, Vilma Banky, Lily Damita, Lya De Putti, Camilla Horn, Raquel Torres and Lupe Velez.

Of these, only Emil Jannings, Pola Negri, Lily Damita, Lya De Putti and Camilla Horn had any substantial motion picture experience, or had achieved any conspicuous success on the screen, before moving to Hollywood. All the others, Charlie Chaplin and Greta Garbo included, may be claimed as native sons or daughters of California.

(Definition of a Native Son of California: One who has lost money in a real estate deal.)

Garbo, for Instance

FROM a Swedish film fan I heard the protest, "Our divine Garbo was bought from us with American dollars."

That's a noble statement, but it isn't true. When Greta Garbo left her native land, no one then protested that Sweden was being robbed of its greatest art treasure; almost no one knew that Greta Garbo existed. She arrived in Hollywood, unheralded, unwanted. It remained for a young American director, Monta Bell, to see in her possibilities that no one had previously suspected except, perhaps, Mauritz Stiller, the Swedish director, who brought her to America.

Bell brought out her talent, and it developed subsequently under Fred Niblo and Clarence Brown.

Similarly, if some English director, in the early days of the screen, had happened to observe that genius existed in the scant frame of Charlie Chaplin, then London would have become a center of film production long before Hollywood was heard of. The industry in Britain would have been given an impetus that would have lasted to this day.

However, no British director did recognize that genius. Charlie Chaplin had to wait to be discovered until he fell under the probing eye of Mack Sennett.

The Old School

THE technique of movie acting in Europe has been derived directly from the ancient traditions of the speaking stage. Thus we see, in almost every European picture, acting that is stiff, and pompous, and mannered—in a word, "ham." Now and then some great artists (Jannings, for instance) will shatter these traditions, and rise above them. But great artists (Jannings, for instance) are regrettably rare.

In America the movies managed to divorce themselves almost entirely from the speaking stage, and developed a style of acting that is unaffected, easy and naturalistic. Perhaps the leading exponent of this style, if not the originator of it, is Harold Lloyd.

Strangely enough, the stage in New York has learned this naturalistic method of acting from the studios in Hollywood.

American Boasting

THERE is an unaccountable belief, prevalent particularly in Great Britain, that American motion pictures are sent abroad not so much for the purpose of making money, as for the purpose of spreading American propaganda.

It seems that the movie industry is secretly subsidized by the U. S. Government, and that Colleen Moore, Thomas Meighan, Gloria Swanson, Dolores Costello, Buster Keaton and others are paid to spread the gospel of Americanism throughout the world.

I can't quite make out what the object of all this propaganda is supposed to be. Certainly, it can't be to encourage immigration, because the quota is already full for years to come. But whatever the object, it seems to me that the advertising campaign is being badly mismanaged.

For most of the American films that I have seen lately in European cinema theaters have tended to inform the audiences that the United States is populated by gunmen, loose women, drug addicts, stool pigeons, gin-guzzling society girls and corrupt cops.

There is no such thing as normal, human life in America, if you believe all that you see and hear on the screen. And Europeans are only too glad to believe just that.

Competition

IT SEEMS to me that the best thing that could happen to the motion picture industry as a whole would be a tremendous outburst of film production in Europe. Competition is the life of trade, and the perforated celluloid trade is no exception to this rule.

In 1920, just after the war, conditions in Hollywood were becoming lethargic and very little progress was being made. Then Germany suddenly was heard from; the works of such directors and stars as Ernst Lubitsch, Jannings, Pola Negri and F. W. Murnau were seen for the first time in America. And Hollywood had to wake up and open its eyes.

This German invasion enlivened and stimulated the movie industry in America to an incalculable extent.

The German pictures of today are technically excellent, but they are revealing very few original ideas or unusual talents. They are imitating Hollywood as closely as possible, instead of opening up new paths for Hollywood to follow.

Russia seems to be the chief hope of those who look for artistic progress on the screen. Russia is experimenting and exploring, and has already produced some startling results.

It is extremely improbable, however, that Moscow will ever seriously worry Hollywood by competition.

Indeed, just at present, there is no competitor in sight, unless the English producers should achieve a miracle and turn out talkies of any considerable merit.

This, too, is extremely improbable—even though the English producers are making heroic attempts to overcome their inexplicable lack of understanding of the movie business.

So Hollywood will continue to have everything its own way—until such time as the public has grown weary of carbon copies of The Singing Fool and The Broadway Melody, and has begun to look elsewhere for its entertainment.

Merna Kennedy gives a snappy demonstration of what the young lady of 2029 will wear. It's certainly a sad thought that we'll have to wait a whole century, isn't it?

Merna Kennedy—Youngster

Merna—believe it or not—would very much like to avoid high-powered dramatic rôles, preferring to act with the younger generation. Read her reasons why!

By DOROTHY RUST

BREAKFASTING with Merna Kennedy at a wayside inn near Hollywood is all that it's cracked up to be, especially when she is in a talkative mood. Getting up at the unfamiliar ring of an alarm clock sometime just before sunrise isn't conducive to good interviewing, but meeting Merna in an unusually effervescent state of mind, and driving some twenty miles with her to breakfast in a quaint Old English inn, rare even in Hollywood because of its unsophisticated atmosphere, is.

At first she conversed impersonally, but finally, after some coaxing and quite a few carefully baited questions, she did talk about herself.

In that animated, spontaneous way of her's, she told me all about the time she was expelled from high school; her pre-school days when soccer and football, played with the toughest boys in the neighborhood, was the greatest diversion of her young life; how unmercifully she had been "set" in bridge at the studio on the preceding day when she recklessly outbid her partner; about the time she kicked Charlie Chaplin in the pants, because his temper got the best of him one day at the studio.

"And the amusing thing about it was that Charlie was so surprised he forgot to get mad, and was in the best of humor the rest of the day," she laughed, in recalling the incident.

And now was the crucial moment to pop the big question concerning all those Hollywoodian rumors about Charlie and Merna!

"Nothing to it!" she insisted hotly, "but I'll admit it was a marvelous opportunity for a lot of gossiping typists to jump at. Why, Lita Grey and I were chums! Years ago we both met Mr. Chaplin in a Hollywood drugstore, and afterward Lita and he were married. I'll bet Charlie even forgot me, until he saw me playing in a musical show at the Mason Theater in Los Angeles. He sent a note backstage suggesting that I try out for the feminine lead in his current picture, The Circus. I did, and received the rôle. At that time I was seventeen, and that was my first part in films—a leading one, too. Of course, I was thrilled!"

BUT after that, Merna pointed out, came domestic troubles between Lita and Charlie, and because she was his leading lady it involved her, too. In reality it shouldn't have, but it all happened in Hollywood, so there was no escape. Followed a two-year retirement from the screen.

"But now it is all very different. Time, I believe, proved that it was all folly and that I had nothing to do with the Chaplin divorce. And when Broadway came along, I got my second screen chance to make good."

"I suppose your part as Billie Moore in Broadway will lead to some excellent dramatic rôles," I challenged.

"Well, anyway, let's hope not," she sighed. "I'd much rather pal around with a bunch of the younger movie set than be a dramatic success, and be forced to ritz all of my old friends. I know girls that have worked their way up to enviable positions in this film game. I pity them rather than covet their success, because they are forced to not only appear high-hat to the outside world, but also carry it even into their own homes. At heart they're all right, but deliver me, please! You can see why I am trying to avoid tremendously dramatic rôles, can't you? I wish I could act with a bunch like Universal's Col-

SOUND and SILENT

By EDWARD R. SAMMIS,

BEHIND THAT CURTAIN (Talkie)

THIS was once a mystery story, and a famous one; now it is a movie, and a good one.

Lois Moran is a girl who married a rotter, but was determined to stick it out until the right man came along in the person of Warner Baxter. Then there was nothing for her to do but run off with him, all in a perfectly nice way, of course. After a lot of romance we finally get to the murder, but by that time, who cares about that?

Lois Moran is nice to look at. Warner Baxter's rôle doesn't give him much of a chance, which circumstance is a shame after his dashing Cisco Kid rôle in In Old Arizona.

Warner Baxter's splendid performances, registered whenever he is given a reasonable part to play, rank this actor close to the top of the roll-call of talkie actors.

Lois Moran has developed from just another pretty girl into a very capable young actress and her voice has a certain quality that should help her along to great things in this talkie business. Gilbert Emory from the stage is effective as Sir Frederick Bruce of Scotland Yard. There are some desert scenes of compelling beauty.

In general, it may be said that this is one of the outstanding talkie successes, rating well toward the top of the good ones that recent months have seen. Based on the story by Earl Derr Biggers, it is a skillful combination of a murder mystery and a powerful love affair.—Fox.

THE SINGLE STANDARD (Silent)

ALL Greta Garbo fans—and who isn't?—ought to declare a national holiday over this one.

The story concerns the adventures of a lady who not only took love where she found it, but went around looking for it. Then one day she met Packy Cannon (Nils Asther), prizefighter, painter, and what have you, and throwing convention to the four winds went romping off to the South Seas on one of those excursions you dream about. Eventually, of course, it wore itself out, and Packy brought her back to San Francisco and dumped her out on the dock to face the scandal. However, up turns a faithful lover of her youth in the person of Johnny Mack Brown, who has been a-waitin' for her all these months and finally persuades her to marry him. All goes well. Time passes, and a baby comes, as babies will. Then one day up turns Packy Cannon; Greta finds that her love is not quite dead. Then, for the first time she is forced to choose which of the men in her life she really wants. And you'll never guess whom she chooses. Nils Asther is more devastating than ever in the rôle of the vagabond painter.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

SCREEN SECRETS REVIEWER

HER PRIVATE LIFE (Talkie)

BILLIE DOVE'S rôle in this picture affords her the opportunity to render the really great acting of which she is pre-eminently capable—and she makes the most of the opportunity. The result is a picture that is not to be missed, whether you are a Billie Dove fan or not. In the latter case, you are apt to become an ardent one, on seeing this talkie.

The story deals with the experiences—emotional and otherwise—of a lady of the English nobility who, after being divorced by her husband, goes to New York City. There she is a victim of such ill fortune that, poverty-stricken, she is forced to pawn her last pearl in order to buy food. And does she remain poverty stricken? There's where the drama comes in!

Walter Pidgeon gives a notable performance, playing opposite Miss Dove, and the cast includes Thelma Todd, Roland Young, and Montagu Love. Taken as a whole, the picture is a highly dramatic and forceful one, giving not only Miss Dove, but many other members of the cast an opportunity to demonstrate their talkie prowess.—First National-Vitaphone.

SAY IT WITH SONGS (Talkie)

AL JOLSON and Davy Lee are at it again. This might be The Singing Fool under a different name, only this time Al sings over the radio, and little Davey doesn't die, although he does get hit by a truck, which is more or less to be expected, after all.

Al, in a moment of carelessness, kills a man, it seems, and has to go to jail for it. While there, he learns that his wife has fallen in love with a doctor, so he decides to give her up.

Presently he gets out and is living in the slums with the child when Davey is hit by a truck. Of course there is no one who can save the child from being crippled but the doctor, so Al gives him up, too. And that, of course, brings us to the big moment in which the little child hears Daddy's voice over the radio.

Marian Nixon is attractive as the white-capped nurse who tenderly cherishes the lovable little bundle which is Davey Lee. Miss Nixon's histrionic charms are obscured somewhat by the powerful personality of the great Jolson, but she is appealing and as capable an actress as ever, nevertheless.

While there is plenty of tear-provoking material in this one, the sentiment is true and believable, not mawkish, and the golden voice of America's black-faced throb songster gives no evidence of diminishing power.—Warner Brothers.

EVANGELINE (Sound)

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW was a good poet in his day, but no great shakes as a scenario writer, so it took courage for Edwin Carewe to tackle the job of making a movie out of one of his favorite pieces. The plot moves a little slowly. There are moments when it would be a positive relief to see the U. S. Cavalry come galloping over the hill to liven things up again. However, the beauty of Dolores Del Rio in picturesque costumes and settings makes the picture something very comforting to look at. It is a sort of series of beautiful pictures. To Robert Kurrle, cameraman extraordinary, goes a great deal of the credit.—United Artists.

STREET GIRL (Talkie)

IT WOULD be Betty Compson in the title role, but this time she plays it sweet instead of hard-boiled. The first sweet rôle, in fact, that Betty has had in years, and it's a treat. Betty is a wandering waif, who is welcomed in out of the cold by four boys who have an orchestra. So she goes to live with them. My dear, it's really being done this year. And of course the fact that they are an orchestra makes it possible to drag in a song hit every little while, which seems to be every producer's aim and ambition these days. Jack Oakie is the comedy hit, working on an oboe like a chiropractor on his favorite spine.—RKO.

THE ARGYLE CASE (Talkie)

THIS is a sort of family reunion for Tommy Meighan and Lila Lee. Remember when they used to play together in those down home dramas a few years back? Here they are again and doing nicely, thank you. Their voices are splendid and Lila looks better than ever.

Meighan is the detective with the second sight who knows just where to find the finger prints. H. B. Warner is good as usual as the family attorney. Lila Lee is the girl, wrongly of course, suspected of the murder. There is scarcely a flaw in the development of the plot, and it will easily hold its place as one of the best mystery pictures of the year.—Warner Brothers.

WONDER OF WOMEN (Talkie)

HERE is a picture which, starting from scratch with a hatful of handicaps, manages to grip you in spite of anything. It gets under way as a silent film and half way through it breaks into speech. There is no star. But a strong cast and a good story carry it safely over the hurdles.

Lewis Stone is a stepfather who had no use for children until he met Wulle-Wulle, the child of his second wife. Peggy Wood, of stage fame, and Leila Hyams both do well in the picture. Clarence Brown's able directing is its outstanding characteristic and puts this in the very front rank of current pictures.—M-G-M.

DARK STREETS (Talkie)

IT SEEMS that there were two Irishmen named Pat and Mike. And both of them were Jack Mulhall. No, I am not getting dizzy. That is the first dual rôle in the talkies.

Pat is the good brother. He's a policeman. Mike is the bad brother. He's a crook, the dirty so-and-so. They are in love with the same girl, who is Lila Lee, and she finds it hard to choose between them, which seems natural since they are both Jack Mulhall. One night there is a gang war. And two square toes are turned to the daisies. Is it Pat? Or is it Mike in Pat's clothing? Don't you wish you knew?—First National-Vitaphone.

THE VALIANT (Talkie)

THIS picture ranges all the way from being very nearly great to just plain mediocre. You can talk about movies having grown up, but we still have our little gray-haired mothers who sit in rockers out under the ellums and wonder where our Joe is tonight. Nevertheless, the picture has its great moments.

For one thing, it gives Paul Muni, an actor new to the screen, an opportunity to do his stuff. He has a great gift of registering emotion after emotion while scarcely moving a muscle. Actors who think they aren't getting over unless they scream and howl might take a lesson from him.—Fox.

THE LOVE TRAP (Talkie)

DEAR, dear, what we don't know about chorus girls after all these back-stage pictures. And now Laura La Plante is one. And what a lot of trouble she gets into, with all the best intentions in the world! Her girl friends tell her that the way to get along in the world is to go to some wild parties and she believes them. Fancy! Of course a mean man, played by Robert Ellis, tries to take advantage of her. Of course she rushes out onto the street and who should she meet but Neil Hamilton, with whom she falls in love on the spot. The cast is excellent, but if you try to figure out the plot you will wake up talking to yourself—Universal.

THE LAST OF MRS. CHENEY (All-talking)

THINGS are coming Norma Shearer's way these days. No sooner had she staggered the public with her performance in her first talkie, The Trial of Mary Dugan, than she follows with a quick right to the public plexus in The Last of Mrs. Cheney.

This picture is taken from the Broadway success. The plot isn't much, but the lines are everything. The cast, with the exception of Hedda Hopper, is entirely British. Basil Rathbone promises to be a sensation as a leading man. George Barraud does great work as Charles, the butler.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Grace Kingsley

HOBNOBBING

Miss Kingsley's unquestioned authority on happenings in Hollywood results from a long period of contact with the motion picture industry as a news writer and critic for The Los Angeles Times.

By GRACE KINGSLEY

WHY, of course, Lily Damita never was engaged to Harry Richman, that lord of New York night club life!

Lily told us all about it the other day. It was all a great joke.

"It was this way," explained the vivacious Lily, whose brown eyes sparkled at the recollection. "You see a lot of us were on a friend's yacht at Catalina Island. These Americans, they were putting up treeks on me—card treeks, hypnotizing treeks—till they get me c-c-razy—excited! I scolded.

"This Harry Richman says to me, 'You're crazy!' That makes me, oh, so mad! I think I am insult. I have no father, no brother to hit him—so I hit him—crack—across the nose! He gets mad with me—won't speak. But we are in a boat together and have to meet every day. So I say to him one day, 'Aw, let's make up!' He is nice about it and we make up. Then I say, 'Let's pretend we're in love!'"—Lily laughed joyously at the memory—"So we do. Some people come from other yachts—some newspaper people with them—we kid, Harry and I, and they think we are engaged! Tha's all!"

Like Father, Like Daughter

JOHNNY MACK BROWN'S wife has just presented him with a little daughter—their first child. Of course Johnny is delighted.

Eddie Lowe asked Johnny, on hearing of the recent happy occurrence, whether the baby could talk yet.

"Talk?" echoed the proud father, "why, suh, she's got a Southern accent!"

Bessie Love Is All Grit

MAYBE there's somebody in the film world who is gamer than Bessie Love, but I don't know who it is.

When she was taken to the receiving hospital, following her automobile accident, all the attendants rushed to her side, when they found out who their patient was.

Bessie calmly asked them to look after an old man who had just been brought in. Then, when a sympathetic young physician began sewing up her head where it was lacerated, she began kidding him. "I want it nicely hemstitched!" commanded Bessie. "I'll bet, clever as you are, that you never learned to hemstitch!"

And the very first inquiry Bessie made at the studio, when she returned following her accident, was of Clarence Brown.

"How much," she inquired of Brown, who flies his own plane, you know, "does an airplane cost?"

Charming little Marion Davies struts saucily down this avenue of legs in a song-and-dance number from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's The Hollywood Revue of 1929.

Lon Chaney Bragging

LON CHANEY, like every other fisherman, loves to tell about his luck. But he's going to be careful hereafter who he brags to.

He went fishing in the High Sierras last week, in a lake near Bishop, and caught 125 fish. That's more than the legal number.

Coming down the mountain and stopping to repair his car, he met a man.

"Catch much?" said the man.

"Yep, 125," boasted Lon.

"Do you know who I am?" asked the man.

"No," said Lon.

"Well, I'm the game warden."

"Know who I am?" asked Lon.

"No," answered the warden.

"Well," answered Lon, "I'm the biggest liar in the State!"

Charlie Chaplin to Wed

IF ALL signs, rumors and reports do not fail, Charlie Chaplin will wed ere the year is out. Friends of Charlie and Georgia Hale declare that the marriage is certain to take place. One sees them out together all the time, and never a party is given at the comedian's house that Miss Hale is not present.

And friends of the couple approve heartily. Miss Hale is a young lady of brains and character. She is a mental pal to Charlie and a mental stimulus as well, as she matches her wits against his in argument and discussion. Yet their tastes are similar. Georgia, too, is just that frank sort of person that other women trust.

Leila Hyams models herself a foundation for lots of fun on the beach sands during her leisure hours.

And Then There's Ruggles

EVERYBODY knows the devotion that exists between Wesley Ruggles, director, and beautiful, sweet Katherine Crawford. She always assists him in receiving, when he gives parties at his new Malibu Beach home, and—well, it's all over but the announcement.

Ruggles declares, though, that he is hesitating a little because he is older than Katherine. Nobody would think of it, though, if he didn't suggest it, for he looks very young, and has that mental and temperamental fire which is always fascinating to women.

Katherine never goes about with anybody else.

On the whole, it looks like another marriage soon.

Leila Hyams Tells It

LEILA HYAMS awoke in great disgust, early the other morning, the cause of her awakening being the sound of a radio.

"I lay there in bed, thinking how inconsiderate some people are in playing their radios so early. Here was I," explained Leila, "expecting to have a good morning sleep for the first time in many weeks, because I have been working in pictures, being awakened because somebody couldn't restrain his ardor for music at this unholy hour.

"Finally I got up to have a look out of the window, to try to trace the source of the music. I went into my living room—and there it

LOIS MORAN'S

Lois Moran, as she appeared in The Gallery of the Monsters, with Jacques Catelain, in France, in 1923.

Travel pages torn from the memoirs of a good gad girl—memoirs of lilting, happy, carefree days in Paris, Brittany and the beautiful Gallic countryside—then Hollywood and fame! As reported to

DOROTHY SPENSLEY

Buoyant youth, wholesome, vivid girlhood is reflected in this charming portrait of Lois.

A LITTLE sketch book, tucked away among copy books and playthings for years, has been brought to light. In it is a faithful entry of a young girl's impressions of France—Paris, Brittany and the beautiful Gallic countryside.

Lois Moran was only eleven, verging on twelve, when she and her mother, Gladys Moran, set sail from America for an unknown land, without even knowledge of its tongue. Her experiences and impressions are all set forth with clarity and vision in her Paris sketch book.

Recently Lois pulled the book forth from beneath algebra and Latin tomes and annotated it, adding comments pertinent to her present Hollywood life.

August 5, 1920. Cherbourg is a black city. It is black in layers. Darkest black is the breakwater that stretches out into a lighter black ocean, and the town itself is the lightest black of all. It looks like a smudgy charcoal drawing, such as we make in drawing class at Mount Mercy School in Pittsburgh. We docked at dawn and for the first time I set foot on a foreign continent. (Hollywood, 1929. Two years ago, in '27, mother, my little adopted sister, Betty, and I, boarded the Leviathan for a week-end in Europe. It was our first trip across since we spent four years there. We docked on Friday; saw London and Paris by flying and sailed away on Tuesday. And it was well worth the effort.) Soon we were on board a little train. It is so small that it looks like a larger model of some of our toy trains. The dining cars are very narrow. At déjeuner (already I have learned a word) the steward's coat tails frisked into our soup. He is a very sprightly Frenchman, with spiky mustache. Someone calls him garcon. That is French for waiter. When we turned to look at scenery he whisked away our plates. He is very energetic. Déjeuner, I understand, means breakfast-lunch, but it is very good, nevertheless.

IN TWO hours we shall be in Paris. I think I never was so anxious to reach a place. Paris must be very beautiful. It also must be very wicked. Beauty and evil often go hand in hand. The American papers were full of Olive Thomas' death. It must be tragic to be so beautiful and to die so young in such a lovely city.

PARIS SKETCH BOOK

There is a French family in the next compartment. They chatter so fast, I wonder if we shall ever be able to learn to talk with the people here. Gladys is teaching me the difference between a franc and a centime. The conductor sticks his head in the door and tells us we are soon in Paris, madame et mademoiselle.

August 6. Cherbourg was a black city. Paris is a blue city. We arrived at dusk last night. The lights on the Eiffel Tower were just beginning to gleam. The long wide avenues were astream with motors. There is a dusky haze, not like violets, more like gentians, over everything. Even the trees look blue, a little. Street vendors thrust Parma violets under your nose and say, "Violettes, mademoiselle?" They cost one franc. Everybody seems very happy, as if he were bound for a party. You feel vivacious, too; at least that is what Gladys calls it. It is like the champagne in the air, of which you read. We are stopping at the Savoy Hotel, on the Rivoli.

FRANCE is very nice but I do not like its lettuce. First, on the transit, they served it hot. "Endive," they called it. Then, at the hotel, they served it cold. I tell Gladys that I like France but I do not like her lettuce. She laughs.

August 10. We are now at Madame Aubigeult's, in Tours. Again we took a little rocking train and went toward Brittany

MY DIARY

My red letter day! Samuel Goldwyn, the motion picture producer from Hollywood, is at the Ritz. He is looking for an actress to play Juliet to the Romeo of Ronald Colman. I have written Mr. Goldwyn a letter and he has asked Gladys and me to call.

SEPTEMBER 3, 1925

A page from Lois' diary written before she had found glory and happiness in motion pictures.

No, these two virile specimens of girl and boy aren't physical culture instructors. Lois Moran and George O'Brien, both prominent Fox stars, are merely posing for a picture which shows, perhaps, the results of clean living. Miss Moran is considered the most unsophisticated, girlish young lady in the film colony—she drinks neither liquor nor tea nor coffee—and her greatest dissipation is ice cream.

LILY DAMITA

Small wonder that gorgeous Lily Damita was drawn into European motion picture productions, when her fame spread as a dancer. This photo from Miss Damita's personal collection, shows the star as she appeared in Red Heels, made in Vienna. The film was an immediate success.

Enter the Prince of Wales and Prince George into Lily's life, and a new love —the movies. In these chapters of the French star's life story, Ronald Colman is the lure that brings her to America.

By

The Editor reviews Part I.

BROUGHT up with the one idea firmly implanted in her mind that some day she was to be a great actress, Lily Damita spent a strange childhood wandering over Europe, learning a little of languages, a little of history, and a great deal of singing and dancing. As a child her mother taught her to fear men as the enemy of her career and to put love and romance out of her life. During the war she made her first public appearances, singing to soldiers at the relief camps. At fifteen she made her formal début as a dancer in the ballet of the Opera de Paris. Then came a three-years' adventure with a band of strolling players, bringing American jazz to hidden corners of Europe. Wearying at last of this, she eagerly accepted an offer to return to Paris as a dancer at the Theater Des Capucines.

Now go on with her story:

AH, PARIS! Can you imagine how good it is for me to be back once more? The honking of the funny taxicabs, the cries of people in my native tongue, they are like music to me. All my life I have never live much in any one place. I have travel in many countries, I know many languages, but always in my heart I am Parisian. And how good it is always to have a bed to sleep in, to know I am going to get paid at the end of the week. The life of the wandering player, it is good when you are young and can laugh at everything, but it is nice to have security for a change.

At the Theater Des Capucines I have my first real taste of the gay life of Paris. It is not so hard as the Opera where I must study and rehearse all the time I am not working. They are very kind to me. I have my own number in the Revue from the very beginning. I begin to have a name in a little way, to have my own small public who come just to see Lily.

Then one day I get my big opportunity. It is to come and dance at the Casino de Paris. You know the Casino? It is the ambition of every girl to dance there. It is the most wonderful, the most gay of all the places in Paris. It is like the grand cabaret—very beautiful with divine food and music and the biggest show of all. It is there you meet the biggest people in Europe.

It is different like that in Europe than in America. The girl who is populaire in the cabarets, everybody desire to meet her, to take her to parties; the people in the highest society, noblemen, princes, she meet them all.

They have in the middle of the show the entre act. It is like what you call the intermission. It is the social hour for the girls who dance. The people who want to meet you, they send in notes, they get friends to introduce them. Your dressing room it is piled high with the most beautiful flowers. There are many boxes of bonbons. Then they come and you have big party in your dressing room. They have the waiters bring in bottles of champagne and they drink many toasts to you. After the entre act is over you go back and dance and your friends give you the great applause.

When the theater is over there are very gay supper parties that last until daybreak. We form a big crowd and go to the little cafés in the Montmartre that are open until dawn.

I first go to the Casino dancing in little numbers by myself. At that time Mistinguette, who is one of the most famous dancers in Europe, is the première danseuse of the Casino. I want very much that I, too, should some day be première danseuse. She is the big star of the show.

My Big Chance Comes

ONE day the manager of the show he come to me and say, "Lily, I want you should be the understudy for the great Mistinguette, so that sometime something happen she cannot go on with the show you take her place."

I am so happy I do not know what to do. I laugh and I sing all the time until people say, "What is the matter with you, Lily?" I

Lily had one ambition, to be the première danseuse of the Casino. Then one day Mistinguette was ill, and Lily's chance came. But Mistinguette's costume was much too large for Lily and great numbers of pins had to be pressed into service. The dance started, the pins pricked and Lily jumped about like a cricket. The audience went wild over what they thought was a cute little wiggle.

Richman to tie matrimonial knot with Bow—Jolson visits Ruby in Gotham—So's your oil man—Police reporter playwrights—and other newsy titbits from Broadway.

By TED SHANE, SCREEN SECRETS' New York Correspondent

HO-HUM! They do tell that that It gal, whotsermame?—ah, yes—Clara Bow, has done gone and got herself engaged to the It boy, Harry Richman, godpappy to all the Rudy Vallees in this over-sex-appealed suffering world.

Harry, 'tis roomid abaht, met Clara while she incognitoed about New York not many moons back, stopping at the Park Central under an assumed name (see a recent issue of SCREEN SECRETS for facts—adv.) to avoid publicity.

They say further that Harry and Clara did some fancy stepping about. They were rarely seen anywhere together, however, Harry evidently being careful not to step on Clara's incognitoes. So Clara went back to Hollywood, no one suspecting the overwhelming secret that was being shared by the two. Clara went to work making Dangerous Curves and Harry sat down to a good moon every night, dreaming of his Far-Away L'il Passion Flower. Then suddenly Harry was called to the Great, Glowing Land of Harry Rapf to make The Song of Broadway—and, in five weeks, when Harry shall have finished hooting through his picture, they intend to do the old halter act.

AT THIS point, it becomes necessary to tell a little of the leading characters of this powerful domestic drama. Everybody who knows anything knows the life story of Clara Bow. Whatever it may be, you all know how Elinor Glyn suddenly discovered It (after American vodvilyists had known all about it for years) and applied the term to those vast reserves of restraint that are Clara's by birth. And how, since that day, Clara has become the Bernhardt of the Screen, the Greatest Little Trouper of all Time, owning her own cars, homes, furs, joolery, hot and cold running chauffeurs.

As for Harry Richman, he deserves a word or two, even though he is to be only the bridegroom. Richman formerly played a little piano and sang in the old Murphy cellar under Earl Carroll's Theater. His voice, which the gals find full of peaches, cream, honey and other goo, but which I find full of razzberries and (sour) cream, soon won him a place in George White's Scandals. He has also made millions of hot records and broken heart after heart and emptied pocketbook after pocketbook in his palatial aforementioned Club.

Nacherally the news of the engagement is going to raise hell amongst millions of members of both sexes.

It is curious that a girl puts notches in her drawer for the number of men that she has given the mitten to—while a man does it for the same reason. Just the same, Clara once had a young man try suicide (unsuccessfully, as you guessed) after she had laden him with the pumpkin. At a subsequent court testimony, a friend of the young man said, "Clara kissed X— so hard, that his lips were sore for days afterwards. He couldn't do any work for days after being kissed like that . . . She would bite his lips until the blood ran." Clara, when she heard this evidence and the gruesome details of the wrist-slashing said, "And you say he tried to commit suicide? Well, what nice weather we're having. You know, he pursued me and actually bored me. The man I marry must dominate me."

As for handsome, golden-throated Harry, he was recently reported ardently in pursuit of Lenore Ulric, the human torch, now in Hollywood, too.

WELL, at last we're getting to a point. Namely, I don't believe the wedding will ever come off. Why? First, because me spies tell me that when Clara did the Gotham rounds on that vacation of her's, she was seen mostly in the company of a swell and brainy-looking young medical student, with whom it looked as though she was very much that way. The young man has gone to Germany to complete his studies and there is good reason to believe that he will consummate some day with Clara. Besides, all Broadway hears that Richman has been a poor draw in his talkies thus far and that this announcement is just a gag for publicity. Wherefore I'm sitting very pretty and keeping very cool about the whole thing. At the time of going to press I know no more about the matter than you do. I can only guess. But I think that my guess is good enough to warrant the prophecy that the wedding will not come off. In the meantime, I marvel at what a man will do for publicity. Ho-hum.

AL'S HERE. That is, that Jolson feller. How come? Well, having finished his latest chef doover for Warners in Hollywood, to wit, The Song of Songs, and being between pictures—Mammy's to come next—he decided to come East to keep his l'il loyal woman, Ruby Keeler, company throughout the rehearsals and opening of the Ziegfeld extravaganza, Show Girl, in which she stars. Any little peeper into screen romances knows that Jolson is very much married to Ruby Keeler, but he doesn't believe that marriage should interfere with art. He and Ruby are going to have their separate careers. Very sensible, too.

Here's one of Al's favorite stories. A Scotchman was being operated on for brain trouble. The doctors had his whole brain out on the table next to him when a fire broke out. Everybody rushed out of the hospital in a panic, completely forgetting the poor Scotchman. Suddenly someone

TALKIE TALK

A monthly feature devoted to bringing our readers the latest, most authentic news of talkie personalities and developments.

First Talkie Double

THAT bright young man, Russell Birdwell, who, on the strength of his excellent little $500 picture, Street Corners, won a contract for himself as director at Fox Studios, has achieved a notable triumph in his first picture, Masquerade.

He shows a man playing a double role, talking to himself! This isn't, of course, difficult at first glance, but is harder than it seems, owing to the intricacies required for double exposure, which requires careful timing. If the speaker talked too soon, his speech would impinge on that of his double, or if the interval were too long in the conversational give-and-take, it would be ridiculous.

Friend and Critic

MANY and strange are the pranks played by the mischievous microphone. Here's one of the latest. An acquaintance was looking on while an actor went through a big scene. During the business the actor noticed the bystander whispering to a companion. When the scene was over, the actor went over to greet his acquaintance. "Well," he asked, "how did it look to you? And how did my lines sound?"

"Oh, you were great," replied the acquaintance, who had been doing the whispering; "really, I have never had the pleasure of seeing anything so well done."

Whereupon the actor, in an expansive mood, invited the acquaintance into the playback room to hear again the scene they had just been through.

The lines rippled smoothly out of the loud speaker. Then there was a moment of silence and during the lull, a very small and far away, but very clear voice was heard to whisper: "He's lousy, isn't he?"

Cutting Their Speeches

HOLLYWOOD film cutters take words right out of players' mouths in a new development of the talkies. At Paramount, one actor pronounced athletic as "ath-e-let-ic." A cutter corrected his pronunciation by clipping one-sixteenth of an inch from the sound track on the film. Cutters are also able to remove entire words from dialogue sequences. The important thing about all this is that it saves many retakes.

Introducing the Hole-Puncher

A VERY important person on a sound stage these days is the man who goes 'round punching holes in the walls of a set, using an automatic auger.

But that isn't so destructive as it might seem. The chap who bores the holes is merely letting the air in so the voices of the players won't sound too hollow!

The holes he bores are so tiny, in fact, that they are not visible to the camera's eye. But they are very important and most every indoor set has to have them.

A Bad Break

DURING a performance in a leading theater in a city in Ohio, a patron became so interested in the talkie feature being presented that he slumped away down in his seat. A pint bottle in his hip pocket slipped out, went sliding along the floor down the incline of the balcony, to smash with a loud noise at the bottom. Everybody in that part of the house sniffed and then laughed. When this happened the talkie feature had just ended and the organist was playing a solo. When he heard the bottle crash he played just a bar from How Dry I Am.

Getting Results

LEAVE it to Lionel Barrymore to get what he wants! While directing The Green Ghost at the M-G-M studio, he wanted a chorus to sing in sepulchral tones in the seance scene in the new talking picture based on Ben Hecht's story. So what did he do but place a large nail barrel under the "mike" and have the singers sing into the barrel. The "mike," 20 feet overhead, caught the loud sound from the barrel; a new voice effect was achieved—just what Barrymore wanted.

Conrad Nagel

Conrad Nagel

IF CONRAD NAGEL had followed his childhood ambition, the field of architecture might have been benefited, but motion pictures certainly would have been deprived of one of their most beloved players. Nagel's mother was a concert singer; his father, Dr. Frank Nagel, was a noted pianist and composer, but their son, Conrad, wanted to design buildings. To prove that he was in earnest, he secured a summer job laying bricks. The union stepped in and he stepped out and went to college at Des Moines, Iowa. His success as an entertainer at college turned his ambitions to the stage. He joined a Lyceum Bureau as a reader, later he joined a stock company, then vaudeville and finally Broadway. His first big part was in The Natural Law. His first experience before the camera was in 1918 in Little Women.

Corinne Griffitn

Corinne Griffith

SHE was born on the border line between Texas and Arkansas and comes very near having no native state. Her father, a railroad man, was of English descent and her mother's parents were Italian. She began having her own way early in life. When she was only four, her father took her to the circus. She flatly refused to leave, so daddy bought the circus for her. In her early teens she determined to be an artist. The first money she earned was $50 for a still-life study. After her father's death, the family moved to Los Angeles. Corinne loved to dance and attended one at Santa Monica. She received the beauty prize offered that evening. One of the judges was Roland Spurgeon, a film director. He made a test of her the next morning; the result was a contract from Vitagraph.

Lila Lee

Lila Lee

LILA LEE was born in New York City on July 25, 1905. She is the daughter of Charles and Augusta Lee Appel. Private tutors made it unnecessary for her to attend public school, which she now regrets. At the age of five she first appeared on the stage in a Gus Edwards' revue, being billed under the name of Cuddles because she was so tiny and chubby. "Just a cuddly baby" is Mrs. Edwards' description of her. She was starred in the Gus Edwards' Revues until 1918, when she left the stage to make her début in pictures. Her first picture was The Cruise of the Make Believe, for Famous Players-Lasky. She was then given a five-year contract by that studio. After her contract expired, she again returned to the stage and appeared in a New York show called The Bride Retires. Since then she has been free-lancing.

Kenneth Harlan

Kenneth Harlan

KENNETH HARLAN was born in Boston, Massachusetts, and attended public school there. He began his stage career in Boston and later came to New York City, where he played in vaudeville with Gertrude Hoffmann. Lois Weber saw him in a road show and was so impressed with his work and with his appearance that she gave him his first screen rôle in The Whim. So well did he handle this part that Universal gave him a contract. It was here that he met and married Marie Prevost, his leading lady. They were recently divorced. Mr. Harlan left pictures two years ago to appear on the stage in Los Angeles. After the run of the play, he toured the country in vaudeville. So great is he as a box-office attraction. that he consented to a second tour. He has an unusually sensitive nature.

Joseph Schildkraut

Joseph Schildkraut

BORN in Vienna, Austria, March 22, 1898. Educated in Vienna and Berlin. Studied music with the idea of becoming a violinist. Graduated in 1913 from the Imperial Academy of Music, Berlin. His father is Rudolph Schildkraut, noted actor. His mother, Erna Schildkraut, is a non-professional. His admiration for his father and his father's art caused Joseph to desert his music for drama. His work as an actor took him to all the large cities of Europe. He came to America in 1920 and starred with the Theater Guild for five years. His first picture was Orphans of the Storm, for D. W. Griffith. His wife is Elise Bartlett, a well-known stage actress and she continues in her profession. He has three hobbies—books, music and dogs. His library contains 17,500 volumes, in five languages.

Irene Bordoni

Irene Bordoni

THE Island of Corsica in Ajaccio, has long been renowned as the birthplace of Napoleon, but it is also the birthplace of Irene Bordoni. Her great grandmother was the sister of Millet, the artist. Her stage career began in an act of disobedience. When a youngster of thirteen in Paris, she disobeyed her mother, and instead of coming directly home from school, she pranced into the Theater Varieties and asked the manager for a job. She got it and a salary of fifty cents a week! George Halevy, the noted French writer, discovered she had talent and gave her a real chance on the stage. Soon she was known all over Europe. But America's Broadway beckoned. She learned English and came over, scoring a success in Miss Fortune, with Elsie Janis. Her popularity grew until she became star of her company.

Backtrailing Movie History

¶ Movie personalities and developments of a decade or so ago.

Do you recognize them? These two little girls, Gloria Swanson and Marie Prevost, now world-famous, were just getting their start as Mack Sennett bathing beauties when this picture was taken.

THIRTY years ago, Rex Beach, Jack London and Jesse Lasky stood on the streets of Nome, Alaska, watching the parade in celebration of the birth of the first white child in that city.

In 1903, 26 years ago, the first real narrative picture, The Great Train Robbery, was started. This picture introduced the first stunt man. He was Frank Hanaway, of the U. S. Cavalry, chosen for a part because he could fall off a galloping horse without breaking his neck.

In the same year, Harry Warner and his brothers opened a 99-seat store show called The Cascade Theater, in their home town of Newcastle, Pennsylvania. The chairs were rented by the day from an undertaker and on days when a funeral was held the patrons of the show had to see the picture standing up.

Twenty-five years ago, Adolph Zukor, who was then a furrier in Chicago, loaned a friend $3,000 to put into a penny arcade peep show. The friend was not making good and Zukor rushed to New York to protect his interest. There he met Marcus Loew, also in the peep show business. Out of this adventure grew the string of theaters and also the present interest of Mr. Zukor in motion pictures.

Fifteen years ago, Mack Sennett started his first six-reel comedy, Tillie's Punctured Romance. It was fourteen weeks in the making and brought into prominence Marie Dressler, Fatty Arbuckle, Charlie Chaplin and Mabel Normand.

When the sun became too weak for filming purposes, generally about 4:45 p. m., work stopped, and the company, tired and dusty, went back to camp and a big dinner. Generally by 10 p. m. the camp was silent under the light of western stars.

Strange, indeed, to those who witnessed the filming of these scenes, was the contrast presented.

COVERED wagons, manned by bearded pioneers, carrying women in hoop-skirts, rolled away slowly over the plains, while at their side rolled a glassed-in camera booth, with an extended swinging microphone, recording the conversations en route. It was a strange co-mingling of vehicles of a primitive era, before the times of modern invention and electricity, before the talking motion picture camera, recording on all-natural color film! In the days of 1849, cameras themselves were scarcely known, let alone pictures that moved, phonographs, electric lights, radio, or photo-electric cells!

Song of the West is adapted from the operetta Rainbow, the New York stage success by Oscar Hammerstein II and Laurence Stallings. Vincent Youmans, of Hit the Deck and Rio Rita fame, wrote the music. John Boles is already famous for his work in The Desert Song. Vivienne Segal who sings the lead in Song of the West, is new to pictures, but is quite the darling of Broadway's musical shows. She sang the original New York stage lead in The Desert Song, and recently completed 58 weeks in the feminine lead of Flo Ziegfeld's musical extravaganza, The Three Musketeers. Joe E. Brown, remembered from the stage in Twinkle, Twinkle, and recently seen in On With the Show on the screen, has one of the most important rôles in Song of the West, that of the comedy mule skinner.

Lost the Point

I HAVE seen many good pictures, of late, that have been marred because the art director got too exuberant with his bosses' money.

The whole point of the stage play Broadway is the yearning day dream of the "hoofer" to get a job in vaudeville. When you look at the gorgeous night club which the art director has given him in the night club, any vaudeville job would grow tame by comparison.

Just so, Billie Dove's first talking picture, Careers. In this, a young wife consents to sell herself to the governor of a French colony in Indo-China—in order that her husband can be promoted and go back to Paris. From the picture, you can see no reason why he should have a special hankering to get to Paris. The point that the producers left out was the terrific heat of Saigon.

—Harry Carr.

WHY 9 OUT OF 10 SMART WOMEN instinctively prefer this new sanitary protection

KOTEX IS SOFT . . .

1 Not a deceptive softness, that soon packs into chafing hardness. But a delicate, fleecy softness that lasts for hours.

2 SAFE, SECURE . . . keeps your mind at ease.

3 KOTEX FILLER is far lighter than cotton, yet absorbs 5 times as much.

4 IN HOSPITALS—Kotex is the identical material used practically EXCLUSIVELY by surgeons in 85% of the country's leading hospitals.

5 DEODORIZES . . . safely, thoroughly, by a patented process.

Kotex—45c for 12—at any drug, dry goods or department store; singly in vending cabinets, through West Disinfecting Co.

Kotex Super-Size—65c for 12

KOTEX

The New Sanitary Pad which deodorizes

IT is easy to see why the use of Kotex has become a habit among women who set the standard of good taste. For such women have young ideas, young minds.

Often, it is the young women of a household who introduce Kotex. Or a doctor, a nurse . . . recommending it to safeguard health. But, in any case, once it is used no substitutes will ever do.

Today, Kotex is so inexpensive that home-made cheese-cloth and cotton pads actually cost more . . . one need not bother to make them.

Why, think of it! Kotex filler is used by surgeons in 85% of the country's hospitals, not only for sanitary pads but for all surgical dressings! Can you imagine a more eloquent tribute to Kotex?

"I started to use Kotex because of my children," said a smart woman recently. "Now I wouldn't go back to the old way. This is so much more civilized—how did we ever get along without it?"

You will ask that same question, once you've tried Kotex. Study its features, listed right here. Then buy a box and try it.

Letters of a Movie Extra

Hollywood

ABOUT two weeks ago I went to see a certain man about a certain part in a certain picture and he said, "Naw, yer too thick." I got to thinking it over and decided maybe I was a little overweight, so I went home and got ahold of this diet list—this eighteen-day starvation period—by which so many of our celebrities are knocking off the aver-de-poise and for two weeks I existed—it would be a crime to say lived—on grapefruit, lettuce and eggs, but it was not useless torture, because I lost, or mislaid, ten pounds.

I looked as slim as a greyhound, so I trotted back to see the wizard. I busted right up to him and said, "Well, here I am and I'm thinner."

That's when the jolt came. That man actually said to me, "Say, Frenchie, I didn't say you were too fat. I said you were too thick. You may have lost ten pounds but you lost it in the wrong spot—your head is still plenty thick."

I FINALLY landed a few days at Warner Brothers playing a little Mexican girl in Under the Texas Moon. I don't look exactly Latin but by keeping my back to the camera and out of the director's sight, I got by.

Ever since Warner Baxter made In Old Arizona, the studios have been making pictures with Spanish backgrounds and Portugese dialects. In this picture, Frank Fay plays Don Carlos. He can handle everything but the general appearance and he can't look Spanish any more than an Albino can look Ethiopian.

He likes pictures and Hollywood and all that, but the lights do bother him. They are so bright.

Michael Curtiz is the director. I thought when I climbed out of that tank full of cattle in Noah's Ark, I never wanted to see him again, but after a few weeks' idleness he didn't look so bad. He is a good director but his treatment of the Queen's English is no cure for convulsions. He gets up on a parallel and yells, "Props man, props man, go me for some vine glasses after, qvick."

It is a beautiful set away out on the old Lasky Ranch. There must be a thousand people on that location and the whole thing is done in color. And it will be some color, too, with all those old Spanish costumes.

I JUST heard that Howard Hughes had actually finished Hell's Angels and was about to start on The Front Page. Well, if they leave the play with its original dialogue the entire company can get a lot of wrathy remarks (about the trouble on the former picture) off their chest.

I stopped in to get a sandwich at a little café on Sunset and who was there but Jimmy Murray. He looked terrible and I don't think he's worked since he took it upon himself to break his contract about a year ago. He broke it because he thought it wasn't good enough—believe me, a poor contract should be better than none. If I had one, it wouldn't ever need to worry about abuse from me.

Francois Fern

And This is Paris!

Of course the boat was christened the "Whoopee".

Mr. Renault loaned his island to the hosts for a gorgeous display of fireworks rivalling that of the Grande Semaine at Deauville. Afterwards, the guests were brought back to the Bois de Boulogne to the Ermitage leased for the evening by Mr. Glaenzer, and especially illuminated for the dance and supper that followed.

WHEN I was in Vichy some time ago, a ripple of excitement ran one day from lip to lip: "Charlie Chaplin is going to turn a picture in a tea-shop here at three o'clock."

I felt like crying: "Tell me a better one!"

Charlie, I felt sure, was not in France. But everyone insisted that the rumor was true, and our hotel made such a point of securing me a table of honor whence I could see the famous comedian at work, I hadn't the heart to voice my skepticism.

Three o'clock found me at a ringside seat near the door by which the great little Charlie and his cast were to enter. To my astonishment, he actually arrived.

"But," I cried, seeing the well-known derby, fly-mustache and mutton-kink curls, "that's not Charlie Chaplin—he's too tall!"

"Oh, yes it is!" everybody assured me.

The scene was filmed with much dropping of napkin, spilling of tea, exaggerated effects of the derby and finally stumbling over his own feet in departure—slapstick stuff, lacking the genius which raises Charlie's work above that of the common clown. Of course it was some local actor—he may even have had a contract authorizing him to turn this Vichy scene in Charlie's name—I don't know.

But all the Vichyites remained firm in their conviction that they had seen Charlie Chaplin in the flesh. I hadn't the heart to disillusion them.

Chester Morris, Proud Papa

CHESTER MORRIS of Alibi fame has an eleven-months-old son, Brooks Kilborn Morris, who is spending his days during the summer cutting teeth upon a full-sized pipe which Pat O'Malley presented him for that purpose. Pass the Morris home on Scenic Drive any time after ten in the morning and you'll see the son and heir swinging in a canvas contraption on the porch enjoying his smoking apparatus.

Speaking of Chester, we were interviewing him the other day when he remarked sadly, "I wish I could give some of the cute sayings of our youngster for publication. But so far all he says is, 'glub, glub, and blub, blub'—exactly like a movie star trying to make a talkie."

Mr. Morris is one of the newcomers from the stage, remember.

"Unaccustomed as I am—

....Yet 4 Weeks Later He Swept Them Off Their Feet!

IN A DAZE he slumped to his seat. Failure . . . when a good impression before these men meant so much. Over the coffee next morning, his wife noticed his gloomy, preoccupied air.

"What's the trouble, dear?"

"Oh . . . nothing. I just fumbled my big chance last night, that's all!"

"John! You don't mean that your big idea didn't go over!"

"I don't think so. But Great Scott, I didn't know they were going to let me do the explaining. I outlined it to Bell—he's the public speaker of our company! I thought he was going to do the talking!"

"But, dear, that was so foolish. It was your idea—why let Bell take all the credit? They'll never recognize your ability if you sit back all the time. You really ought to learn how to speak in public!"

"Well, I'm too old to go to school now. And, besides, I haven't got the time!"

"Say, I've got the answer to that. Where's that magazine? . . . Here—read this. Here's an internationally known institute that offers a home study course in effective speaking. They offer a free booklet entitled How to Work Wonders With Words, which tells how any man can develop his natural speaking ability. Why not send for it?"

He did. And a few minutes' reading of this amazing book changed the entire course of John Harkness' business career. It showed him now a simple and easy method in 20 minutes a day, would train him to dominate one man or thousands — convince one man or many—how to talk at business meetings, lodges, banquets and social affairs. It banished all the mystery and magic of effective speaking and revealed the natural Laws of Conversation that distinguish the powerful speaker from the man who never knows what to say.

Fortunately, the opportunity to resubmit his plan occurred a few weeks later. But this time he was ready. "Go ahead with the plan," said the president, when Harkness had finished his talk. "I get your idea much more clearly now. And I'm creating a new place for you—there's room at the top in our organization for men who know how to talk!"

And his newly developed talent has created other advantages for him. He is a sought after speaker for civic, banquet and lodge affairs. Social leaders compete for his attendance at dinners because he is such an interesting talker. And he lays all the credit for his success to his wife's suggestion—and to the facts contained in this free book—How to Work Wonders With Words.

For fifteen years the North American Institute has been proving to men that ability to express one's self is the result of training, rather than a natural gift of a chosen few. Any man with a grammar school education can absorb and apply quickly the natural Laws of Conversation. With these laws in mind, the faults of timidity, self-consciousness, stage-fright and lack of poise disappear; repressed ideas and thoughts come forth in words of fire.

Getting Personal

Intimate items about the stars not to be found elsewhere.

Theda Bara may have been a vamp to screen fans, but her husband calls her "Tootsie."

Colleen Moore has fourteen electric clocks in her new Bel-Air home. One of them plays three different sets of chimes.

Hoot Gibson has just purchased a new Rolls-Royce limousine. This makes six cars for Mr. Gibson.

Glenn Tryon is so attached to the studio that when not working he spends his time either riding horses on the lot or working out in the gym.

Betty Compson wears a pair of rhinestone studded shoes that cost a whole $225—a pretty good price even for Hollywood.

Gary Cooper

Gary Cooper has opened his dude ranch in Montana at last. His father is running it for him.

Pauline Frederick, whose hobby is cooking, has entered the Hollywood cake-baking contest. Later she discovered that her chef had also entered the contest.

Adolphe Menjou presented his friend, Maurice Chevalier, with a Sealyham Terrier which Maurice promptly christened Adolphe.

Al Jolson presented Douglas Fairbanks with a golf-watch on his birthday recently. It was inscribed "Bought and paid for by Al Jolson" and a note accompanied the gift which read, "You'll never do a seventy if you use this."

When Nils Asther returned to Hollywood after six weeks aboard a yacht off Catalina Island during the filming of The Single Standard, he asked M-G-M for a vacation.

"You've just had it," replied Irving Thalberg, his boss.

Charlie Farrell's friends have been wondering for two years where it was he spent his Tuesday evenings. Now the secret is out. He's been taking singing lessons.

Sue Carol

Sue Carol's mother has purchased a new Lincoln town car as a birthday gift for the perfect flapper of the screen.

For more than a year, Marian Nixon has been investing all but $100 of her $1,500 weekly salary in building and loan associations.

Few know it, but with the exception of evening gowns, Marian, with the help of her sister, makes all her own frocks.

Colleen Moore is looking forward to a three months' vacation, in Europe, with one of the three set aside for her stay in Ireland, land of her forebears.

Edmund Lowe wears a blue béret with his sport clothes.

Joseph Schildkraut has one of the few pure white police dogs in the world.

George Bancroft has a 40-inch chest measurement and a four-inch chest expansion—without benefit of red flannel undies.

Stepin Fetchit has a colored chauffeur who drives his big Cadillac and Stepin rides in the front seat with him.

Charles Morton tames squirrels and quail that come to his house in the hills.

Greta Garbo

Greta Garbo has moved her trunks from the Miramar Hotel, overlooking the Pacific at Santa Monica, where she has lived since coming to Hollywood, three years ago, and has taken a lease on a home in Beverly Hills. Just where in Beverly, however, is Greta's secret.

studied for years and years preparing my voice so that I might one day become a great star of the legitimate drama. Then, when motion pictures called, I gave up all I had learned during the years of study. I buried my voice in the silence of cinema theaters.

OF COURSE, talking pictures have changed the technique of the screen. In silent pictures, the actor had to put over his idea in pantomime before the title flashed on the screen. For example, let us assume that in a silent picture I was to say to another character: 'We must make no false move in this place. Behind me is the revolution leader.' Before I spoke my title, I would glance around cautiously. Then I would lean forward and place my hand on the arm of the person to whom my title was addressed. Before I spoke, I would again move my eyes slyly toward the revolution leader. Then I would open my mouth, and the title, in written words, would be inserted into the picture.

"Now all such surplus motion is unnecessary. I act as I naturally would. I lean closer to the character I am to address and I say: 'We must make no false move in this place. Behind me is the revolution leader.' The very tone and volume of my voice establishes the fact that I am being cautious.

"The experienced stage actor never worries about his voice. He has become unconscious of it. That is the reason he is superior to the screen actor in talking pictures. The screen actor is conscious of his voice. He listens to himself talk. The stage veteran does not. He has learned how to use his voice and then has forgotten to think about technique; consequently, he is at all times natural."

Seated carelessly on the floor of his damp basement, Lowe told me how he happened to go on the stage and then into motion pictures.

Several years ago, a graduate of Santa Clara University with high honors, he informed his family that he did not like law and had decided to become an actor. His decisions created an uproar, but Lowe did not allow this to change his course. He went to San Francisco and to the Alcazar Theatre, then that city's foremost show-house.

FRED BUTLER, later a prominent character actor in motion pictures and now deceased, was then stage director at the Alcazar. Lowe entered his outer office. He was awed to find himself in the presence of several prominent actors of that day, but he held fast to his courage and finally found himself before Butler. The stage director, noted for his kindness and for his willingness to aid beginners, promised Lowe that he should have an extra bit the following week.

With this promise, Edmund left the office. En route through the lobby to the street, he stopped to look at the photographic displays. He was thus engaged when Butler's assistant burst hastily through the door with the information that the director had decided Lowe would be satisfactory for a part in the show then in rehearsal. It thus happened that Edmund was lucky enough to get a stage job on the very first day and in the first place he applied for work.

LOWE'S first motion picture was The Spreading Dawn. He was tested for the part by the Goldwyn company and was cast to play opposite Jane Cowl. He did not desert the stage at this time, but he alternated between it and the screen.

He quit the stage permanently when he signed a Paramount contract to appear opposite Betty Compson in a picture titled The White Flower. The film industry has had exclusive use of his services since.

The past five years were spent at the Fox studio, where he has risen to stardom in such pictures as What Price Glory? Iz Zat So? Dressed to Kill, In Old Arizona, Through Different Eyes and latest, but not least, The Cock-Eyed World. Looking over this list, I find it includes a suprising number of very big productions. At least four of them may be classed in the familiar movie group termed epics, although the word is sadly misued by the film representatives.

While he was telling me the historical facts of his career, Lowe suddenly sneezed. Three times he sneezed. The eruption over, he raised his eyebrows and pursed his lips.

"Lil will kill me," he muttered (Lil is Lilyan Tashman, his wife). "She will say I should have more sense than to sit on this damp cellar floor. I'll probably have a terrible cold before the day is ended."

We climbed steps again to the comfort of Lowe's living room, where we both enjoyed proper precautions against colds. Just before I departed, Edmund called his valet into our presence and gave orders to carry the old wardrobe trunk and its contents up to his den.

"I'm going to have it cleaned up," he explained to me. "Finding that old trunk was like running across a long lost friend. I won't allow it to mildew in the cellar.'"

At the door, as I said good-by, Lowe sneezed again.

"I hope you don't catch cold," I sympathized. "You should be more careful —at your age."

Then I sneezed. I caud a bad co'd, doo.

EARLE LIEDERMAN—The Muscle Builder
Author of "Muscle Building," "Science of Wrestling," "Secrets of Strength," "Here's Health," "Endurance"

Kill This Man

There's a devil inside of you. He's trying to kill you. Look out for him! He tells you not to work so hard. What's the use—the boss only piles more work on you. He tells you not to bother with your body. Do you recognize him? Of course you do. He's in us all. He's a murderer of ambition. He's a liar and a fool. Kill him! If you don't, he will kill you.

Saved

Thank your lucky stars you have another man inside of you. He's the human dynamo. He fills you full of pep and ambition. He keeps you alive—on fire. He urges you on in your daily tasks. He makes you strive for bigger and better things to do. He makes you crave for life and strength. He teaches you that the weak fall by the wayside, but the strong succeed. He shows you that exercise builds live tissue—live tissue is muscle—muscle means strength—strength is power. Power brings success! That's what you want, and gosh darn your old hide, you're going to get it.

Which Man Will It Be?

It's up to you—Set your own future. You want to be the Human Dynamo? Fine! Well, let's get busy. That's where I come in. That's my job. Here's what I'll do for you.

In just 30 days I'll increase your arm one full inch with real, live, animated muscle. Yes, and I'll add two inches to your chest in the same time. Pretty good, eh? That's nothing. Now come the works. I'll build up your shoulders. I'll deepen your chest. I'll strengthen your whole body. I'll give you arms and legs like pillars. I'll literally pack muscle up your stomach and down your back. Meanwhile I'll work on those inner muscles surrounding your vital organs. You'll feel the thrill of life shooting up your old backbone and throughout your entire system. You'll feel so full of life, you will shout to the world, "I'm a man and I can prove it."

Sounds good, what? But listen! That isn't all. I'm not just promising these things. I guarantee them! It's a sure bet. Oh boy! Let's ride.

An attractive bevy of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer chorus girls in a scene from The Hollywood Revue of 1929. This dazzling production trots out in one elaborate ensemble the pick of M-G-M's stars and featured players.

Classified Picture Guide

DRAMA

1929—This is the most marvelous, most dazzling pot-pourri of singing, talking and dancing that has come to the screen. There isn't any plot—sing Hallelujah! But there is this impressive lineup: Marion Davies, Gus Edwards, Bessie Love, Marie Dressler, Polly Moran, Charlie King, Conrad Nagel, William Haines, Buster Keaton, Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy, the Brox Sisters, Joan Crawford, Ukelele Ike, Natova, Norma Shearer and John Gilbert. Oh, what a masterpiece! You can quote us as saying that The Hollywood Revue of 1929 is the greatest screen entertainment of all time.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

SMILING IRISH EYES—Colleen Moore sings with a verve and a sincerity that will tug at your heartstrings. She makes you laugh and she makes you cry and you'll love her more than ever when you see her excellent performance throughout this picture.—First National.

ON WITH THE SHOW—This is the first of the all-color talkies, and judging from its overwhelmingly successful reception at the box-offices throughout the country, there will be more like it. Betty Compson and Arthur Lake play the two chief rôles, but Joe E. Brown's great comedy work attracts the major share of spotlight glitter. Sally O'Neill is adorable and Sam Hardy is as smooth an actor as ever.—Warner Brothers.

THE BLACK WATCH—Victor McLaglen and Myrna Loy as the chief characters in a story of love, politics, intrigue and India under the midnight moon. Rather an unconvincing plot, but good entertainment.—Fox.

THE FLYING FOOL—It's all about aviation, with William Boyd, Marie Prevost and Russell Gleason. The boys are brothers and are in love with the same girl. Boyd, a stunt flyer, and that way about women, thinks his brother in puppy love. One of them marries the girl. Guess who? Gleason shows great promise.—Pathé.

COMEDY

BROADWAY BABIES—Alice White as a chorus girl who marries a fathead with a fat bankroll. He gets himself conveniently shot and Alice uses the money as a step to becoming a Broadway star. Alice does her own singing—and it's quite okeh!—First National.

PARIS BOUND — Ann Harding's breath-taking beauty is apt to obscure this picture. Not that her work isn't excellent—but she is so captivating! This is a really great picture that succeeds on its own merits, without benefit of ballyhoo.—Pathé.

COLLEGE LOVE—George Lewis frolics through a career of football, disgrace on the eve of the big game; and reinstatement in just the nick of time to make the winning touchdown for dear old Calford. Dorothy Gulliver is the gal who sticks with George through thick and thin.—Universal.

WHITE COLLARS—The screen version of this well-known stage play is as amusing as the thing in the flesh. Conrad Nagel plays the millionaire, with Leila Hyams as his wife. Bessie Love and Robert Ober supply the comedy, and you'll like it.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

What They Are Doing

Dorothy Mackaill's latest is The Woman on the Jury, a First National show.

Doug Fairbanks, Jr., is hard at work on The Forward Pass.

Loretta Young plays opposite him. It's a First National picture.

Marilyn Miller is busy on the perennial Sally, for First National.

Richard Barthelmess is at present working on Young Nowhere, for First National.

Lenore Ulric, famous New York stage star, is now making Frozen Justice, for William Fox.

Hal Roach Studios have three comedies now under production, one Laurel and Hardy, one Our Gang and one Harry Langdon.

Sunny Side Up, which Fox is making, will give us the treat of seeing Janet Gaynor and Charlie Farrell together once again.

Bessie Love (and her ukulele, I guess), and Charles King, are busy on another Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture of backstage life, The Road Show.

Greta Garbo's first picture since her return from Sweden will be Jealousy, for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Jungle will serve as Joan Crawford's initial starring vehicle, for M-G-M.

The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Trader Horn company, with Harry Carey and Edwina Booth in the leading rôles, is still in Africa.

Clara Bow is busy being The Saturday Night Kid, at Paramount, just now.

George Bancroft is now working on The Mighty, for Paramount.

Maurice Chevalier. is singing his charming way through The Love Parade, for Paramount.

Bebe Daniels is hard at work on her first talkie, Rio Rita, which is musical as well as just plain audible.

John Boles has the male lead in the picture, which is being produced by RKO.

Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks have almost finished The Taming of the Shrew, their first co-starring vehicle, for United Artists release.

Norma Talmadge's first talkie, which she is making for United Artists, is Tin Pan Alley.

Gilbert Roland plays opposite her.

Under a Texas Moon, a Warner Brothers production, brings together Frank Fay, John Boles, Vivienne Segal and Armida.

Dolores Costello is playing in Second Choice, for Warner Brothers.

Tiger Rose, at Warner Brothers, boasts the glamorous presence of Lupe Velez.

Pauline Frederick is making The Sacred Flame, for Warner Brothers.

George Arliss is playing Disraeli, for Warner Brothers.

Laura La Plante is now making another for Universal, One Rainy Night.

POSTAL POUCH

The Postal Pouch editor will answer on this page any questions you may want to ask concerning the movies. For a personal reply, enclose with your letter a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

THOMAS: Not the cat variety, however, are you? How the boy-friends like Baclanova. But I'll bet my Sunday teeth that you don't know how to pronounce her name! It's tricky! She was born in Moscow, Russia, is five feet four inches tall, has natural blond hair and blue eyes, weighs one hundred and sixteen pounds, received her stage training when she entered the Moscow Art theater at the age of sixteen, and is married to Nicholas Soussanin. She came to America with Morris Gest's production of Carmencita and the Soldier in 1923, and was here eight months at that time. She returned in 1927, and has been in pictures ever since. Her first screen appearance was in The Dove, in which she had a small part.

WENDELL: Tom Mix was born on a Texas ranch in 1880. He is five feet eleven inches tall, weighs one hundred and seventy pounds, has black hair and brown eyes. He was originally with the 101 Wild West Shows, but joined the old Selig Picture Company many years ago. About twelve years ago he discovered a pathetic little wild colt, which he bought for almost nothing. Today Tony is almost as well known as his famous master. Colleen Moore was born in Port Huron, Michigan, on August 19, 1902. She is five feet four inches tall, weighs one hundred and fifteen pounds, has brown hair, and one brown eye and one blue eye. Ramon Novarro was born in Durango, Mexico, on September 20, 1899. He is five feet ten inches tall, weighs one hundred and sixty pounds, and has black hair and brown eyes.

HERBERT R. W.: Gee, what do you think we are—a matrimonial bureau? I don't know any "lonesome little extra about five feet two inches tall, either red haired, blonde, or brunette" who will write to you whenever you write to her. Better hire a secretary to write billets doux to you. If, as you say, you don't think it's anything to brag about to know stars, better stand on the Hollywood street corner when you come out here. Every very hungry looking girl will be that "lonesome little extra" you're yearning for.

Who Will Be Next?

Mary Brian

EVERY month one of the stars answers a letter received by Postal Pouch and sends to the writer an attractive, large photograph of herself. This month's lucky fan receives a photograph from Mary Brian. The winner's letter and Miss Brian's reply appear below.

Dear Postal Pouch Editor:

I hate to be such a trouble and ask so much, but could you please tell me the biography of the one whom I firmly believe is the most beautiful, talented and sweetest girl on the screen, Mary Brian?

I'll be watching eagerly for an answer to my question. Thanking you, I am,

Cordially yours,
BETTY K.

Dear Betty:

My real name was Louise. When I played in Peter Pan, Paramount changed it to Mary, which I like better. I have one brother, Taurrence. We were both born in Corsicanna, Texas, where all our early life was spent riding and going to school.

I have brown hair and hazel eyes. My weight was 105 about a week ago, and I am five feet, two inches tall.

I hope you know me better through this letter.

From your very, very sincere friend,

MARY BRIAN.

BETTY M: "Don't get excited and think you're a new girl-friend?" Say, Betty, knowing you've come back a second time is what gets me all agog and aflutter! I must be getting good in my old age! Charles Rogers was so popular that he needed a private secretary some two years before you thought of asking for the job! Mary Brian is five feet two inches tall and is just twenty-one years old. Barry Norton is six feet tall and twenty-five years old, while Nils Asther—the "h" silent like the "r" in "fish"—is six feet two inches tall and is twenty-seven years old. If you come back again I'll meet the postman with a brass band!

E. K. MOVIE FAN: When I saw Alice White last week her hair was blond. She was born in Paterson, N. J., twenty-three years ago, is five feet three inches tall, and still single. I'll say she isn't a "home girl"—unless home's where you hang your hat while you're out at a party. Write to her at the First National Studios, Burbank. I couldn't answer your letter personally because you forgot the stamped, self-addressed envelope.

AGNES K.: Sure I know everything—and what I don't know I'll make up! Buddy is twenty-four years old. Write to Ramon Novarro at M-G-M, Culver City; to Dolores Del Rio at Tec-Art, Hollywood; Jacqueline Logan at Columbia Studios, Hollywood; Ruth Elder, Universal, Universal City; Nancy Carroll at Paramount, Hollywood; and Al Jolson at Warner Brothers, Hollywood. No, Clara Bow has never been married. Gloria Swanson is thirty-one years old, while Douglas Fairbanks gives his age as thirty-six.

LAWRENCE G. C.: You must be a Norma Shearer fan—and I'll make it two! They say she is one of the few actresses who can impersonate a perfect lady without undue stretch of the imagination. She was born in Montreal, Canada, and is married to Irving Thalberg, a young executive at M-G-M, where she is under contract. Mary Pickford is also a Canadian. Clara Bow and Jean Arthur can both be reached at the Paramount Studios, Hollywood.

Exploring Ronald Colman's "Unseen Home" in Hollywood

wrought-iron handle of the door. His greatest weapon in this fight for sanity in a motion-mad world is tranquility.

THE first impression, as one descends the flight of a dozen steps, is of a tranquil old Spanish courtyard, a foot-stoned patio, flaming with flowers. There are petunias of purple and red, Canterbury bells, daisies banked against the protecting wall that rears itself from the street and sinks to meet this patio. A canvas canopy protects a portion of the outdoor room from the afternoon sun. There are comfortable wicker chairs, a little sun-worn, and bright-tiled tables in friendly groups. A roof covering a small veranda to one side offers permanent protection during rainy months, and forms a patio cubierto.

Another door, a rough-hewn door in the Mexican manner, primitive, effectual, with a small amber glass window in which a small colored glass-piece dangles, leads to the cool interior. There is amber glass in the long window with its deep recesses. Two other small-leaded glasses of varied colors hang there. To the right, as you enter, are the steps that lead to Colman's sleeping quarters; a guest room has been converted into a study. There still remains one guest room for the favored enveitado, at the moment Mrs. Freda Smith of Australia, his sister, and the first of Colman's relatives to visit him in Hollywood.

STRAIGHT ahead, and down a step, is the living-room that Hollywood craves to over-run. It is a dusky living-room, save in the morning, when the eastern sun, lighting the tennis court, lights also this room, through long windows that are doors, as well. It is such a sala as might be found in the home of a Spanish gentleman; it might well have been retained from the period just past when the dons built their haciendas in a Latin California. Colman's hacienda, his little estate, is as indigenous to their semi-tropical country as the palms outside the door, the pepper trees and the tall, waving odorous eucalypti.

Ronald Colman once made a trip to the altar, but the marriage proved a failure. Despite this one great disappointment, Ronald is not cynical about women and love and marriage. Some day there will be another Mrs. Colman —Ronald says so—and the companionship of a loving wife will undoubtedly go far toward softening the strictly masculine tone of the Colman hilltop home.

Once Hollywood had the fascinating Britisher linked with Vilma Banky—but they were sweethearts only on the screen, according to Ronald.

IF I WERE not living a bachelor's life," Colman went on "my scheme of living would be different. As it is, I do not entertain in large groups. I haven't the accommodations."

An archway revealed a small dining room with capacity for eight at a handsome antique table. Pewter and Wedgewood china gleamed on a buffet.

"I don't entertain the producers nor the players nor the press in a body, but that does not mean that they never enter my home. They drop in for tennis, or for a chat, three or four at a time. In that way I probably entertain as many as if I gave large parties. Of course, if I married, it would be different. It would be necessary to entertain on a larger scale."

THERE is nothing particularly antisocial about Colman, but why should any man want to leave the secluded beauty of a miniature Paradise for the doubtful pleasures outside of Eden? Overlooking the terrace is a little canopied outdoor room, bright with tiles, in which Colman has his breakfast served by Tono.

Colman is awakened by a decisive knock on the door at seven-thirty of a workaday morning; at eight-thirty or nine on days of idleness. His hour of retirement is irregular, due, undoubtedly, to the absorbing contents of An Experiment with Time, by J. W. Dunne, another Englishman, or the interest between the covers of the Tatler, Punch, The Graphic and other British sheets, spread beguilingly on the low coffee table before the fire.

He would much rather play tennis than swim; therefore, there is no swimming pool. His property covers 140 feet by 170. It is just that many square feet of perfection. An Eden without an Eve, save, perhaps, a gracious lady who comes for tennis now and then, and whose identity is not always the same—as befits a bachelor.

In the summer, he deserts all this bliss on week-ends for a beach cottage at Malibu, far up the coast, where steep cliffs drop within a short distance of the ocean. The same tenor of existence is carried to the water's edge with a few jolly good fellows as companions, and their wives and sisters.

But I think Ronald Colman is never happier than when he is lounging in the orange and green striped swing, gazing long at the piney hill yonder, trying to figure out what lies on the other side. Once, he admits, he climbed in his green roadster as far as the road permitted, but even that didn't take him to the top of the hill. He wants to know what lies abaft it. He will probably never know, for he will never make the effort to find out.

THE GAB BAG

A meeting place for readers to discuss their views on motion pictures.

Too Much Lupe

Dubuque, Iowa.

Dear Editor:

I like your magazine very much, but I am just about fed up on Lupe Velez, the so-called "Senorita Cyclone." Hardly one issue of your magazine comes on the stands but it contains some mention of this "impulsive, madcap Mexican maiden." Most of this stuff sounds to me like the raving of some high-priced press agent.

Why not cut out Lupe from your pages and fill this valuable space with information about actors who can really act?

Very truly yours,
C. P. R.

Editor's Note:

SCREEN SECRETS will publish in a forthcoming issue a pictorial layout of Lupe Velez in a series of impersonations—then you can really judge for yourself whether or not she can act. Your letter seems to disagree perfectly with the opinion voiced below by M. M. B. What'll we do about it?

Let Lupe Make Whoopee

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Dear Editor:

I saw Lupe Velez on her personal appearance tour several months ago and I want to compliment you on giving the little girl such a great big hand in your editorial pages.

I like your "Who's Who in Filmdom" department; it contains some real information. Your life stories on Victor McLaglen, Betty Compson and George Bancroft were great. I can hardly wait to read what SCREEN SECRETS will have to say about Mabel Normand.

M. M. B.

Prefers Home Products

Corvallis, Oregon.

Dear Sir:

I liked the first installment of your life story on Lily Damita very much, but I think Lily tries hard to be like America's IT girl—Clara Bow—and, like most foreigners, falls short of being up to the standard set by most goods "made in U. S. A." Lily may be from Gay Paree (oo-la-la! an' all that), but give me Clara Bow or Alice White every time. They're the original jazz babies of the silver screen! Let's see more of 'em in your pages.

Yours truly,
CORVALLIS CAL.

Mammy from Alabammy

Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Dear Editor:

Want to make an Alabama fan happy? Then let's have a portrait of Johnny Mack Brown with his wife and their new daughter. I'd like to see what this younger generation is coming to.

Also, since John Boles is becoming such a big star, why don't you print his biography in "Who's Who in Filmdom?" I'm sure there are many people who would like to know something about him—where he got his start, etc.

Sentimentally,
MAMMY.

EDITOR'S NOTE:

Thanks for the tip! Thy will be done! There'll be just what you want—John Boles' biography—in the December issue of SCREEN SECRETS, on the newsstands November 10.

Tired of Buddy

Tulsa, Okla.

Dear Sir:

All I see these days in fan magazines is Buddy Rogers, Buddy Rogers, Buddy Rogers. After taking several good close looks at his photographs, and watching his moving pictures, I can't understand the popularity he seems to enjoy. Do me a favor and help me forget his girlish face by not printing it.

Of course, I suppose there are many who are fond of this Rogers kid, but give me George Bancroft, Victor McLaglen, William Boyd or Clive Brook every time.

Sincerely,
C. B. Q.

THE columns of The Gab Bag are open to movie fans everywhere as a meeting place and open forum for discussions concerning pictures and players. Readers are invited to express freely their opinions on any phase of the motion picture industry. Letters should be limited to 300 words. Views expressed by readers are not necessarily in accordance with the editorial views of Screen Secrets.

—Captain Roscoe Fawcett, Editor.

He Likes the Talkies

Hollywood, Calif.

Dear Editor:

On a recent trip to Kansas City, I saw The Four Feathers. Boy, what a talkie! I also saw Noah's Ark, but that was a silent picture—and all wet, besides.

On With the Show is by far the best of the musical hits I've seen since the movies went talkie and I'm not going to miss The Hollywood Revue of 1929, which the critics seem to agree on as being the best movie ever filmed.

I recently saw William Boyd and Russell Gleason in The Flying Fool. There's a picture! I predict great success for young Gleason, and with the help of his dad's dialogue writing, it should not be very far away. Boyd is always good, I think.

Of all the straight talkies I've seen so far (without benefit of back-stage plots and music), The Voice of the City stands out as superlative. Willard Mack is a wonder, but I suppose that was discovered by theater-goers a long time ago.

Cordially yours,
G. H. B.

The Public is Deaf

Nocona, Texas.

Dear Editor:

The public is more deaf than dumb. That is the reason talkies are having a hard time of it. Automobiles trained the public to be alert, the silent drama taught them to be keen, and the talkies will teach them to tune in mentally.

I saw and heard Show Boat recently, and what stays with me most pleasantly is the voice of Joseph Schildkraut. With its elegant enunciation and its delicate inflections, it is like the tone of a master's violin.

Milton Sills has never disappointed me. There is an air of genuine humanness about him, and he is always convincing.

One of his chief attractions is the way he lets the audience see his mind work. Another, is the way he uses his hands. Strange how some hands seem to have thoughts as well as feeling. As a boy, did he love to make his own toys; as a man, what mental and manual art or arts have developed such attractive and beautiful hands?

Sincerely yours,
MRS. J. S. A.

and what music he has arranged for Rio Rita! Even when there's dialogue, there's music. So many minutes of jazz and so many minutes of grand opera—such a versatile genius as Baravalle has plenty of scope to exercise his talents.

Pearl Eaton, who has trained more choruses than any girl in America—and who could well take the lead in any chorus—keeps the Rio Rita "ponies" on their toes and supervises rehearsals of singing and dancing numbers.

WHEN the directors find a weak spot, they go into a huddle and come out with the dictum: "We need something right here." Who supplies the missing punch? Why, Harry Tierney, another of the erstwhile Ziegfeld minions. Then there is Russell Mack, who used to write the dialogue for Ziggy's shows—he spends all his time now putting words together in such a way that they will sound funny.

Rehearsals are not all dull, serious affairs. During one rehearsal, Bert Wheeler and Dorothy Lee were supposed to come dashing down over the hill on a motorcycle, but, of course, they had a double for the long shot. So the director, Luther Reed, called the double over to the motorbike and the double looked at it and said: "Say, how do ya start it?"

They finally got it started for him and he took off at a merry speed, turning it over and rolling, bike and all, down the hill. They all rushed over, thinking he was killed, but he wasn't even hurt. He walked up to Mr. Reed and said: "Well, I didn't do so well that time, but I'll do better next time."

"Not in this picture, brother," said Mr. Reed, and they pressed into service a new double.

AFTER that rehearsal, Bert and Dorothy got on the fiendish contraption for a medium shot and close-up. They started the motor and Bert couldn't stop it, so they just rode right into the scene and right out again—till a cowboy lassoed the machine and stopped it.

Fred Burns, world's champion roper from 1900 to 1913, is cast for a neat bit of cowboy business in Rio Rita, and Big Boy Gillespie, from Castle Hot Springs, Arizona, the much-publicized cowpuncher who recently married Katherine Thorne, Chicago heiress, also has a cowboy rôle.

Don Alvarado plays Bebe Daniels' brother in the picture and he looks enough like her in his make-up to be her real brother.

Rio Rita promises to set a new high mark in motion picture musical extravaganzas. Yea, verily—one more Hollywood raid upon Broadway's theatrical stronghold—and New York's Great White Way is likely to fade out into a dim and feeble flicker.

Glenn Tryon, Universal star, illustrates the prophecy of a New York manufacturer as to what the well-dressed man of 2029—100 years hence—will wear. Trousers to the knee or a little above, one garment to serve as coat and shirt, and sandals on the feet, will comprise the day-time dress. For evening wear, knee breeches, full dress coat, high silk hat and slippers, with long silk hose, is predicted will be the rage.

débris. He got no salary. Just whatever the weepers threw at him.

In this café was an old hard-boiled waiter. He couldn't remember names and didn't even try. So he called Cliff "Ike" and later tacked "Ukelele" in front of it.

Today Cliff uses Ukelele Ike as a trade name.

WHEN Cliff got back to New York he caught on the Ziegfeld Midnight frolic. Then he jumped to vaudeville and tasted first fruits of success. His salary jumped to $250 a week—plenty of dough for a fellow who had been as hungry as Cliff Edwards had been not so very long before.

After playing in musical shows, Cliff went to London to appear at the Embassy Club upon personal request of the Prince of Wales.

After returning, in Sonny, Cliff made a swing around picture houses and then went on the Orpheum circuit. He has saved his money and taken care of himself. No one realizes better than Cliff Edwards himself that Fortune has chosen in him a strange figure upon which to heap success and riches. He laughs every time he looks in the mirror at himself and thinks of how much money he has.

Cliff has a home on the beach at Santa Monica. He is perfectly happy. He doesn't want any more roaming and doesn't care if he never sees a stage again.

And he's not ashamed of having slung hash.

Because he's ready to go back and do it again—if he wakes up and finds it's all a dream.

Keeping pace with the radical developments in motion pictures, brought about by the advent of the talkies, SCREEN SECRETS furnishes a fund of valuable and timely information on this fascinating industry.

A glance at the schedule reveals that someone who understands psychology as well as physiology has had a hand in it.

IN THE first place, it is not an indefinite schedule, but is limited to eighteen days. It gives the dieter a definite distance to go, which is easier from a psychological standpoint than undertaking what looks to be an endless performance.

This eighteen-day feature is also a safeguard against the dangers that admittedly lurk in unsupervised reducing diets, for it does not open the way to a long continued stretch of unbalanced rationing.

Practically all reducing diets throw the ration off balance. They subtract from the menu the large volume of carbohydrates which goes with normal eating and leaves a consequent overload of proteins which put a burden on the kidneys. They have also a strong tendency toward leaving an acid residue in the digestive tract which, in this particular instance, is counteracted by the grapefruit which, though seemingly acid, actually leaves a basic ash or residue.

When it is considered that the sugar and starch of the balanced diet constitute by far the larger volume of food taken, it is easy to see the danger of reducing this portion of the diet to a single piece of well-dried toast.

ROUGHLY speaking, the eighteen-day diet is our old friend, the lamb chop and pineapple diet, with variations, and with the grapefruit substituted for the pineapple. The tomato and cottage cheese school of thought is only slightly represented, although tomatoes do appear with some regularity after the thirteenth day.

There seems to be no trace of the glass of milk and baked potato every other day, which had some vogue a few years ago.

All in all, the menus offered are tasty, and, as reducing diets go, satisfying. The chief advantage seems to lie in the fact that each meal is definitely prescribed, and nothing is left to the individual will-power or discretion. This, taken with the fact that a specific number of days is selected for the test, ought to make it easy for the Hollywood favorites to control their very valuable figures.

An interesting phase of the situation is that the film stars and their supporting players think in terms of half a dozen pounds or so where the average outsider has to do with twenty or thirty pounds at a time.

Johnny Mack Brown, athlete of the lots, halted the diet when he had lost four pounds in seven days. He had figured he was four pounds overweight and he reached the goal long before the eighteen days passed. Mary Doran, of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer talkies, went out to exorcise three pounds and did it in four days.

They say Eddie Brandstatter himself went on the diet, giving as his reason that he would not advocate it for others until he found out what it was like himself.

The estimate of a pound a day as the amount of too, too solid flesh that may be melted off during the eighteen-day period is only an approximate one. Some of the more rotund have done better than this, while those whose appetites have been under more rigid control or whose athletic prowess keeps them in constant trim are likely to have a lesser average.

MOLLY O'DAY is one of the few stars who have not yet taken to the new diet. She has her own method. Having six pounds to get rid of, she went on a watermelon diet and disposed of them handily. The sugar in the melon gave her energy, and the water, taken in this form, added no weight, although water in large quantities has been known to fatten.

Ouida Bergere, the scenarist, is a devotee of the diet and so is Mrs. Alan Dwan, wife of the director. Such young actresses as Carol Lombard, Kathryn Crawford and Elene Aristi are joining the ranks. Bob Armstrong and Lucille Webster Gleason have done some experimenting along the same lines.

Lenore Ulric lost seven pounds in eight days, and admits to cheating, just a wee bit, because some of those cakes on Sunday looked so tempting. Myrtle Stedman knocked off six pounds in three days and stopped, because that was just as much as she wanted to lose. Lily Damita, who, to our way of thinking, is just about right, slipped out of seven pounds in nine days. Mrs. Alvine Lyon, Ben's mother, dispensed with six pounds, and the story goes that Elizabeth Meehan, scanarist of Lummox, took off plenty.

Winifred Westover, who put on thirty-five pounds to play Bertha in Lummox, will probably use the new method to bring her waist-line back from 38 inches to her accustomed 24, her hips from 42 to 36, and her bust from 38 to 32.

Some of the prominent Hollywood physicians have predicted dire things if the diet is continued too long, but others have declared that persons who are not doing too much physical work can live on practically nothing for eighteen days without doing themselves any particular harm.

"Nature's way of curing a good many ills," says one of them, "is to take away the appetite, thus automatically putting people on a diet. If the thing is not overdone or is supervised by a physician, there need be no danger in reducing. Even the dangers of an unbalanced ration are sometimes overestimated, for, in the natural state, savages, living on whatever they can find most of the time, hardly ever achieve a perfectly balanced diet. Far less harm can come of eating lightly after this fashion than from continued over-indulgence in fattening foods without the proper exercise."

Little Mary

AN UNHAPPY lawyer tried to make a sucker out of Mary Pickford one recent day in Los Angeles. A lot of film people like Louise Fazenda, John Gilbert, Will Rogers, Mary, and others, were protesting against the establishment of a cement plant in the neighborhood of Beverly Hills.

Mary having filed a protest, the lawyer for the cement plant decided to get her on the witness stand and make her acknowledge she didn't know what she was talking about. It was a sad and depressed lawyer who went out of the committee room sagging at the knees. Mary knew so much about that cement, about real estate values, and about the principle of real estate zoning, that she had him shrieking for help.

He timidly reminded her that the cement plant would not be so ugly.

"Oh, yes," said Mary cuttingly, "I dare say it will be an artistic triumph—all decorated with mission bells."

"The witness is excused," said the lawyer, in a hoarse whisper.

The Tragic Life Story of Mabel Normand

MABEL lived under the chaperonage of Mrs. Pickford. Mabel was still the studio tomboy. She was recognized as a holy terror. She lived with Alice Joyce and another girl in one of the early day apartment houses in Hollywood.

From the first, Mabel showed brilliant promise as an actress. She had a vivid sense of drama, a striking originality and an artistic sympathy. The only trouble she had was in learning the technique of the screen. She wanted to go through every scene like a whirlwind. The camera was out of breath trying to keep up. But so great is Mabel's power of concentration and will power that she finally became noted throughout the film world for her perfect sense of time. Her screen scenes became models to be studied in that regard.

WHEN I first knew Mabel Normand, she was a queen.

This was in 1916. The old Keystone comedies were then at the height of their fame. The Keystone Kops were known all over the world. The pay checks of the kops held many names afterward to be famous—Harold Lloyd, Mal St. Clair, Slim Summerville, Ramon Novarro . . .

It was like a big fun factory. There were twenty-two producing companies. When the studio automobiles drew up in front of the old Sennett lot every morning to take the comedians out on location, it looked like an army mobilization.

Comedies fairly poured out of the studio to the market.

It was a veritable kindergarten of genius and fame. Nearly every girl and many of the men afterward became famous screen stars—Phyllis Haver, Mary Thurman, Gloria Swanson, Louise Fazenda, Marie Prevost, Polly Moran, Wallace Beery, Raymond Hatton, Raymond Griffith, Charlie Chaplin, Chester Conklin, Ben Turpin, Mack Swain . . .

Mabel was the undisputed queen.

Everything in the Sennett lot was as Irish as Paddy's cart. Sennett had a grand studio office built for himself with panelling made of teakwood and mahogany; and always held all his business consultations in the Turkish bath rubbing room. The big concrete studios were surrounded with old wooden shacks so that the whole effect was of Hooligan's Flats. There were even the goats and the stray cats and dogs wandering around having free fights in the scenery. It was the breath of life to Mabel. She was never happy in any other studio.

She was the most exasperating and the most adorable of stars. She was never there when they wanted her. Every picture was an alley fight with the director. And through it all, Mabel had about as much "side" and was about as "upstage" as an old hat. If she had any fighting to do (which she had about once an hour) she fought with Mack Sennett; she didn't take it out on the hired help.

I recall one day when there was an important scene to do. They were on location. One of Mabel's girl friends drove up. Mabel ran out to see her, climbed into the car and did not come back for two weeks.

IN THE beginning, Mabel's comedies were all made with Sennett and Fred Mace and Ford Sterling. As the company prospered and grew to proportions, Sennett stopped acting and became an executive.

About this time, a new comedian hove in sight. He had been a hick variety actor in Bisbee, Arizona. He got ambitious and came to Los Angeles, where he acted in little burlesque shows on Main street. His name was Roscoe Arbuckle. Sennett found him and put him into comedies with Mabel. To my mind, these pictures were the high tide of two-reel comedies. In many of them Mabel swam and dove. The success of these swimming-in-tights pictures was such that it became impossible to supply the demands of the market. They eventually led to the launching of the Sennett Bathing girls. In these pictures, Mabel had pretty much her own way. The ideas were often her own and the direction reflected her sure touch and daring originality.

I don't know why Mabel always wanted to appear as a roughneck. Even in those days she had a brilliant, thoughtful mind. She read books of heavy German philosophy that I couldn't even pretend to understand. She wrote good poetry—and hid it. Never was there a girl of such perversity. She always took a delight in putting her worst foot forward.

I remember when Charlie Chaplin joined the company. Sennett found him—as every one knows—acting in a vaudeville sketch called A Night in a London Music Hall. Mabel took a dislike to him.

SENNETT always treated every comedy recruit—no matter how famous—the same way. For two or three weeks, he let him roam around the lot—neglected, ignored—lower than the dust. It was during this lonely period that Charlie found those old shoes, the little cane and the funny derby hat in a corner of an old prop room.

When he finally got a part, it was in one of Mabel's comedies. She could not see him at all and did not like him. Mabel was as Irish as the map of Dublin. I imagine it would have been a singular Englishman who could have walked into her heart.

She and Charlie used to fight like a dog and a monkey. She did most of the fighting. She never called him by his right name. She invented the most extraordinary and diabolical nick-names for him. He didn't like the way she did comedy and she didn't like his brand. His technique was entirely different from the one then in vogue.

Money to Mabel was just something to be thrown around. She put it in a pocket that had no bottom, nothing but a hole. Compared with Charlie, Calvin Coolidge was a prodigal wastrel.

Charlie should have been suspicious when Mabel asked him to go with Fatty Arbuckle and three or four others for an evening at a night club at Vernon. But—for once—he wasn't. Every one ordered everything on the menu card. When the waiter came with the check every one but Charlie was dismayed to find that he had left his pocket-book at home. Charlie had to pay—and the bill was $40. He would not speak to Mabel for weeks.

MABEL had a heart of gold. I do not believe any such generous or self-sacrificing soul ever lived in this world. She flung both her money and her quick sympathies around as though dollars were leaves and she owned an unlimitable forest.

Every workman on the lot adored Mabel. She used to borrow the "makings" from them and smoke Bull Durham cigarettes on the sets. She knew all about their children and how they were getting on in the world.

There was an old blacksmith who did all the iron work for the sets. Mabel had helped him when he stepped on a chunk of hot iron and had to go to the hospital. When his wife was operated on, she paid all the bills.

I happened to be wandering around the studio on the day before Christmas. The old fellow came up and, with shy embarrassment, handed her a funny little package—all rumpled up. Mabel unwrapped what was probably the most outrageously ugly soft pillow cover ever seen in the world. She threw her arms around the old fellow's neck and kissed him twice—once for himself and once for his wife. After he had gone, she showed me the funny little uneven stitches, made by trembling, old fingers. Then she sat down and cried.

One thing I always liked about Mabel—the wives of her men friends were also her friends. Mabel had no more inhibitions than a savage of the South Seas. But there was nothing dirty about her private life. In fact, somewhere under Mabel's reckless swear words was a Puritan morality.

On one memorable occasion Mabel was dining in the Alexandria—at that time the fashionable gathering place of the movie stars. A famous woman star who had just been the co-respondent in a divorce suit, came over to Mabel's table. Mabel leaped up, flaming with anger. "Don't you talk to me—you—" she cried. "I may not be a Sunday school character, but I never have broken up homes and broken women's hearts. I let married men alone."

Dear harum-scarum Mabel! I remember once when she was coming to our house for a seven o'clock dinner. She arrived at 10:30 and innocently asked if she was late.

Texas Guinan told me how she looked out on her front steps one morning in her house on Tenth street, New York, and there sat Mabel eating peanuts—like a little street gamin. At that time one of the most famous motion picture stars in the world, she had gotten lonesome and had decided to come to have breakfast with Texas. She got there pretty early so she sat on the front steps a couple of hours.

ONE of the most thundering hits in the history of motion pictures was Tillie's Punctured Romance. This was the first long comedy ever made. And it was made with misgivings. The trade did not believe a funny picture could hold the laughs for six or seven reels. Sennett cast it with a great triumvirate—Mabel, Fatty Arbuckle and Charlie Chaplin. It was a record breaker!

The exhibitors began yelling for more and Mabel was launched in Mickey. The making of it was one long chapter of grief.

The story was written in the first instance by Anita Loos—later to become the author of Gentlemen Prefer Blondes. And then the story was rewritten by about everybody in Hollywood.

There are many ways of winning the heart of a lady; but if Lew Cody won Mabel in Mickey, then it opens a new chapter in the art of love.

I remember that he chased her around and around the room, kicking over chairs while the fair one yelled for help. She ended up hanging on the edge of the eaves of a roof that overlooked a precipice. And in this case it was a real roof and a real precipice. Mabel was always a star athlete and absolutely without fear.

Read how Mabel Normand reached the pinnacle of success and how she played her endearing pranks on the high and mighty in the movie industry. How she overnight became "the woman in the case" in the William Desmond Taylor murder and how this and other scandalous episodes crushed her heart and broke her spirit. And of her sudden marriage with Lew Cody and the jinx of illness and sorrow that has since pursued them both, in the November issue of someone else supplied the words and music.

That, however, was before they had given Raymond's whispering voice a test. Now Griffith is finding it difficult to keep up with all the contracts that are coming his way—thanks to the mixer.

TWO words spoken by Victor McLaglen might have ruined his whole able performance in The Black Watch.

The picture had been completed and given an okeh by the director, when the cutter, who was trimming it down to the proper footage, discovered that the big Britisher had pronounced the word "athlete" as "athalete."

What to do! It was simple!

Victor was called in and asked to repeat the word correctly into the mike. Try as he would, he just couldn't get it.

A double was summoned, spoke the word, and, then, by cutting out one-sixteenth of an inch of the sound track on the side of the film and pasting in the substituted word, the public was none the wiser.

But McLaglen's second stumbling block in the same picture was not discovered until the night of the world première in a Hollywood theater.

Myrna Loy has the rôle of Jasmine, the leading woman. In the big love scene at the end of the picture, the star takes Myrna into his arms and murmurs her name.

To the opening night audience, however, it sounded as though McLaglen was saying, "Yes, Minnie." The house was thrown into an uproar of laughter at a moment when handkerchiefs should have been in order.

Again Victor's voice double was called in, he uttered "Jasmine," and the second-night crowds were none the wiser.

BEFORE the discovery of the gentleman known as the mixer, it was believed impossible to record the sound of a falling body.

One studio tried many things without avail. Then someone suggested crashing a watermelon to the floor. That did it.

But later at the Warner studio, when someone proposed using the watermelon idea to supply noise for Pauline Frederick's fall in the filming of Evidence, the director said "no" emphatically.

"Nothing sounds more like a body falling than a body falling," he announced. "We won't ask Miss Frederick to fall hard enough to get the sound, but we'll call for volunteers among the fellows on the set."

He did, and—

Pauline Frederick took her fall, but a prop boy fell at the same time to supply the noise.

Until the coming of the sound mixer into the picture world, it was almost impossible to register pistol and gun fire.

Recording apparatus was taken to West Point to install the roar of cannon in Colleen Moore's Lilac Time. The result might have been mistaken for the growl of a two-month-old puppy.

When the real thing failed, the picture was taken into sound laboratories at Camden, New Jersey, and artificial noises inserted that supplied the necessary realism.

In even so recent a production as George Arliss' The Green Goddess, it was necessary to use a pistol cap in place of a bullet to obtain proper registration. Firing of the real bullet sounded more like the pop of a child's air rifle.

This, too, has now been overcome by the mixer. From now on, gun fire will be gun fire.

IN The Broadway Melody, one of the acrobats, in two or three places in the dialogue, referred to the Mahoney sisters as "the Mahoney sister." The final "s" had failed to pick up.

The actor was taken onto a sound stage and told to make a noise that resembled a "shush." This was fitted into the sound track on the negative in those places where the "s" was missing.

In M-G-M's Wonder of Women, there is a scene in which Lewis Stone gazes out of his living room window at the ocean—the latter being nothing more than a scenic effect on a canvas drop.

It being a sound picture, it was necessary to have the roar of the surf.

A truck was sent out from the studio to the shore of the Pacific, a few miles away, and thirty feet of "roar" recorded. This was spliced into the picture.

So well was the task accomplished that even studio employees did not detect it.

For years, each producing company has had its library of "stock shots"—crowds at football games, battleships passing in review, cloud formations, street scenes in practically every city in the world, and thousands of others.

These could be inserted in silent films to lend a touch of realism to pictures produced in their entirety inside the studio.

NOW we have the "stock sounds". Gradually, libraries are being built up which will contain the roar of lions, the wash of the sea, the collapse of burning buildings, songs of the birds, the roar of thunder; in fact, every noise that will ever be needed by directors.

Already the talkies have surpassed the fondest hopes of the film moguls. But they are not going to permit things to rest there.

Old Doc Inventive Genius, family doctor to Crown Prince Talkie, will be kept on Movieland's payroll.

The Joy of Accomplishment

sorrows and the happiness which have made of her a woman—if she then at sweet sixteen would have chosen the road which had beckoned.

"I don't know." Leatrice looked over the heads of the eight Russians who were practicing their songs on the set for her first talking picture, A Most Immoral Lady. She did not see them; she did not hear the words of their carols. "What woman knows? What woman would relive her life if she could? If I had settled down and become just a wife and a mother, would I have been happy—when all the time I wanted to be an actress?

IT'S funny how real ambition overshadows every other life value. Ivan Olinsky painted me in oils; the portrait was exhibited in one of the galleries. I went over and listened to the public's remarks, their criticisms. How closely ego is related to ambition. To me that wasn't a painting by Olinsky; it was a future world-famous actress having her portrait displayed before an all-adoring public.

"Then I came West, following the long trek of others to the film mecca. But here I couldn't work as an extra; once established as one, you are stamped, probably forever. John Griffith Ray, the director on my present picture"—Leatrice's eyes twinkled—"had a stock company in San Diego. My manager sent me down as the ingénue lead.

"I knew nothing about it, but again, ambition overbalanced common sense. I took the position and the minute I arrived, I secured one of the public school teachers to instruct me in elocution and voice culture. A forerunner of the talkies, although I didn't, of course, know it. I thought if I acted ritzy and high-hat they would think me experienced. I swept onto the stage late with a mere nod. About the third day, John Ray said to me, 'You've never been on the stage in your life before!' So much for acting on stage or off!

"I stayed there six months. He used to call me 'Wicky-Wicky' and 'Loosey-Loosey.' He still does, right now on this picture. I was that slow!

GLORIA SWANSON was to be starred! Cecil de Mille needed a new girl. He sent for me. I stood there before him and felt like a curiosity, like a side-show in a circus.

"Then he began his work of automatically turning out one more exotic creature. He forces you into the atmosphere of his pictures. When you walk onto a set you think you are a millionairess. The secret of his success is putting before the people things they would like to do, but can never do. He has his players wallow in luxury and think nothing of it.

"Soon after, I gasped what seemed to be my last breath in pictures. The expiration of my contract in March, 1928, came at the wrong time. The talkies, the formidable talkies. A slump in production. Pictures whose releases had not been—well, not like de Mille's other releases. I free-lanced for The Bellamy Trial, but a slump is no time for free-lancing. When I left de Mille, I was getting $2,500 a week. With these new people beginning to come out from Broadway—

WHAT could be done about it? I believed in being prepared. How could I prepare myself to compete with these people? I met Mr. McGowan of the Orpheum Theater. I thought I couldn't do it, even after he showed interest. I had been taking singing lessons. But to come out on that stage alone, to talk and to sing! In a play, you build up a wall between yourself and the audience; you are in the land of make-believe. But in vaudeville you are one of them. You look away from them in a play, in vaudeville you look at them. My mouth was so dry during my first appearance in Los Angeles that I was afraid my upper lip would stay up and act as a muzzle. My tongue crackled like isinglass in my mouth.

That trip was my elocution trainer, my manager-trainer. I learned everything except sword-swallowing from my fellow entertainers. I booked for St. Louis just to see the Lindbergh collection. I mean the gifts which were sent him. That's good for anybody, not only because of the numbers of rare things—the education it gives you, but because you feel so small in comparison to the boy who inspired them. What is your courage compared to his? And yet—while it knocks the conceit, it issues a new insurance policy on ambition.

IN CLEVELAND, First National sent me my contract—proof that my vaudeville experiences were not to be in vain. In vaudeville they were paying me $3,500 a week; the contract called for almost the same amount I received when I left de Mille. I sent it back. Not for more money, however, but to have them insert a stipulation that I could play on the stage between pictures. My ambition had forked in two directions."

She paused; her eyes again looked over the heads of the singers who were still at their seemingly endless practice. "Would I change it? I don't know. Today is today; live for it and for the tomorrow. Vain remembrances or regrets do not lead, they retard progress. No matter where you walk in life, the code is the same. Ambition means keeping prepared and to be prepared is the best weapon for any of us in our single-handed life-battle."

Think of it—you can lose a half a pound a day or more safely without tiresome exercise—without wearing yourself out—without depriving yourself of tasty, delightful dishes that you always enjoy. A discovery called TAKOFF, which is the prescription of a well known physician, is now put up in convenient form so that everyone, regardless of where they live, can benefit. TAKOFF is not a dangerous drug. On the other hand it is a harmless vegetable compound that speedily corrects and adjusts digestive disorders and arouses the all important food assimilation fluids to uniform activity. No matter if you are five or fifty pounds over weight—whether the fat is on your arms, face, legs or stomach, whether you are man or woman, TAKOFF accomplishes the reduction pleasantly and safely. From your very first day treatment you will notice a feeling of better health, more ambition and energy, because you will begin to lose from the very start.

TAKOFF Is Safe—
Contains No Dangerous Thyroid

Unlike many other reducers, TAKOFF is remarkable, inasmuch as it does not contain any dangerous thyroid whatsoever—nor does it contain any other harmful substance. It is really natures own aid for the obese—it can't harm you and it must help or your money back.

How to Order

While TAKOFF has been recommended and used for many years by the physician who discovered this magical formula, it is only a few months since it is available to everyone. Heretofore it could only be had at a fancy price by a limited few who lived at Hollywood, California, the home of this doctor. Now anyone who is sincere and ambitious to take off weight safely and without diet or exercise, can secure a 9-day treatment which is generally enough to reduce 6 to 8 pounds for the small sum of $2.00. Send no money now—just sign your name and address to the coupon below and you will receive your 9-day TAKOFF treatment in plain wrapper by return mail. When it arrives, pay the postman only $2.00 plus the few cents postage.

more than ten thousand people.

The background in solid gold leaf of two densities gave a shimmering effect under the lights of batteries of studio arcs, supplied with current by portable power wagons from the studios. Movietone records and films were taken of the sign, in action, and musical hits were broadcast from loud speakers by microphones about the big billboard as it was exhibited. Bessie Love pulled the ropes that unveiled the huge sign.

A Gift of the Stage

done. In fact she seems to be a composite of these four screen stars.

BORN in the army," she relates, "I learned the law of discipline as a child." She thinks and talks rapidly. "Obeying in the theater, being on time for rehearsals and curtain were second nature to me.

"No, I cannot give you my father's name. He is an officer, high in the army. He has been uncompromising in unforgiveness because I went on the stage. Ann Harding is not my real name. Because of my father's attitude, I have told no one in the film colony his name."

Ann Harding attended school at Montclair, New Jersey, and at the Baldwin School at Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania; then, despite her father's objections, declared that she meant to be self-supporting. Her mother was sympathetic with her from the first.

It was during a summer stock engagement in Detroit that she met Harry Bannister, who is her husband. From a youth who at the ambitious age of ten had run away with a tent show, he had had many years of experience in fine stage productions and in stock.

He was spending the summer with his father in a town just outside Detroit. Ann Harding needed a new leading man. Among others, she interviewed Harry Bannister.

"He was much too expensive, but after meeting him, I knew I had to have him anyway," she laughed. "We played together for only three weeks, then I was offered a starring engagement in New York in The Woman Disputed, so I left to accept this opportunity. Very soon after, Harry also came to New York and he used to take me to dinner and out driving, and so a few months later we were married."

IF HER stock experiences taxed her health and strength, the starring engagement which followed in The Trial of Mary Dugan must have been still more difficult. She joined this company only five weeks after her baby was born—that was last September, and she continued until the middle of January, when she had a severe nervous breakdown and had to leave the company.

She came to Pasadena to rest last spring. No one in the motion picture business knew she was there. She, in turn, was not thinking movies, because she considered she knew nothing whatever about them.

Harry Bannister came west also to play the rôle of the doctor in the stage production of The Strange Interlude, in Los Angeles. Some newspaper press notice added the information that Bannister's famous wife, Ann Harding, was also in the west.

Five studios spotted this bit of news and sent scouts to find her and ask her to take tests for the talkies. Frank Reicher, the well known stage director who she had known in New York, and who is now coaching players for the talking pictures at the Pathé studio, was one of these. When she registered surprise and said she needed a rest instead of work, he said, "Well, come to the studio and have lunch anyhow, and we'll show you around just as if you were a tourist."

THE talkies are going to agree with her health and temperament better than stage life has. She is sure of that.

"Months of production work are wearing. If, on the stage, we could have vacations every so often during the long run of a play, it would be easier. But the movies provide just that. I like to tear into a new job and work hard, and know that when the finished picture is all packed away in tin boxes, I can, if I am completely exhausted, go home and rest in bed for a week. Or, my husband and I can take trips together between pictures. This rest will give me a fresh perspective for each new picture."

Her first talking picture, Paris Bound, is a different type of play than she has ever done on the stage. Footlight audiences remember her in emotional rôles, but Paris Bound is in a lighter vein. She likes best to do romantic drama, like Pomander Walk, Smilin' Through and When Knighthood Was in Flower. Very soon she and Harry Bannister will be cast in a talkie together.

Miss Harding has been borrowed by Samuel Goldwyn from Pathé, to play the lead opposite Ronald Colman in his next picture, Condemned to Devil's Island.

LOVE? Yes, she and Harry Bannister are tremendously in love. They were married only two and one-half years ago. But—she told me timidly, tremulously—so many people in Hollywood had warned her! If they find out a star is really in love and happy, some people won't believe you. Tiresome people give you reams of advice on how to hold each other. Some are jealous. Others try to wedge in and spoil the whole romance. Anyhow, she is apprehensive of a village that no longer seems to have any faith in real love.

Ann Harding doesn't care to go out a great deal socially. Simplicity of taste is another part of her ritual of discipline. She loves the California climate and her little hillside home and garden.

"We spend most of our spare time with baby," she says, "and we seem very complete unto ourselves. But, as I have been told, if you are in love and happy in Hollywood, you mustn't say so. It isn't the wisest thing to do!"

As we shook hands, I made one last effort to get an answer to the question that most interested me. "Are you going to continue in pictures?" I demanded, almost voicing my exasperation.

"Why certainly, I am going on with my career," replied the young bride. "Dick wouldn't think of asking me to give up my work. That was all understood before we were married. Right now, you see, I have to give a little time and attention to Dick," she went on. "Our new home is under construction and I'm busy buying furnishings and draperies. Oh! It's going to be so wonderful when we're all settled."

I said no more to Jobyna, but I did a lot of thinking. So did other writers who talked with her about that time.

WE ALL liked Jobyna Ralston from the day she was first given recognition in the studios, and that was by no means the day she arrived in this city of Rolls-Royces and heartaches. It was many months before she stood out as one different from the thousands who seek work in the mob scenes.

Janet Gaynor and Marian Nixon were Jobyna's pals at the time. All three were eking out an existence as extras, biding the time when they would be given an opportunity at bigger things.

Then Harold Lloyd saw the possibilities of Jobyna and made her his leading lady. He kept her under contract for several years, opening to her the gateway to even bigger opportunities.

Among the young fellows who used to drop into the apartment shared by Jobyna, Janet and Marian, was Charles Farrell. The crowd would gather in the evening, throw back the rugs, turn on the Victrola and dance. Before they disbanded, they would stroll down to the corner for an ice cream cone or a hot-dog sandwich. One night Charlie told the girls he was going to bring a friend who was new to Hollywood and to the picture game. That's how Jobyna met Dick. It was love at first sight.

Jobyna continued to climb. For Dick, things did not come so easily. He supplied atmosphere for a long, long while before he was given small bits. Often he became discouraged and threatened to quit pictures. But Jobyna would urge him on.

HAROLD LLOYD paid Jobyna $1,000 a week. Dick considered himself lucky when he drew engagements that brought him ten to fifteen dollars a day. The two youngsters became betrothed, but marriage, Dick said, was out of the question until their incomes were more nearly balanced.

Came the production Wings and Dick was given one of the leads. Not at $1,000 a week, of course, but at $200 a week and a chance to show what he could do, which was more important than money.

The Wings company would be on location in Texas for six months. In order to be near Dick, Jobyna took a more or less minor rôle in the picture, and—at a more or less minor salary. Certainly, it was far from the $1,000 a week to which she was by this time accustomed.

Wings completed, Jobyna and Dick returned to Hollywood, and it wasn't long before they skipped off to Riverside, then Southern California's Gretna Green, and were wed in the old Mission Inn.

They settled down. Dick went back to work. Jobyna talked about love.

Today Dick is one of Paramount's most popular leading men; so popular, in fact, that his producers have submitted to him a new contract under the terms of which he is to be starred. This despite the fact that his present agreement still has a year to run. And Jobyna? Well, she's just Mrs. Dick Arlen, insofar as the films are concerned.

THE other day I dropped into the Arlen love nest, a rambling white stucco bungalow nestling beneath ancient walnut trees on the outskirts of Hollywood. It was late afternoon.

"Come in quickly," she greeted me. "I'm lonesome and you're a sight for sore eyes. Dick's just getting up and I've been trying to kill time since noon. You see he's working nights now."

"Why don't you go to work?" I suggested. "Then you wouldn't have time to be lonely. Maybe they'd put you on the night shift with Dick."

The big Ralston eyes dropped. The smile faded from her face.

"I guess they don't want you in pictures when you're in love," she answered, somewhat sadly, I thought. "You don't hear of the producers fighting for my services, do you?"

Ah! Jobyna at last had awakened.

"But still happy otherwise, are you not?" I ventured.

"Happy?" cried Jobyna. "Still the happiest girl in the whole wide world. We sink more deeply in love every minute—but that's not for publication."

"Why?" I asked, smiling, for I knew the answer that was coming.

"Say, that's just why I'm not in pictures right now," she said. "I loved and talked about it. Now the love goes on but the talk ceases."

Jobyna told me she hoped someone would invent a new name for talking pictures. She is firm in her belief that the two words don't belong together. Once she, too, was in pictures. But she talked!

Jobyna wants to "come back," so she intends to profit by her one big mistake.

She will continue to love Dick Arlen. But—"It's not for publication!"

Pickups From the Lots

A Flying Lochinvar

BEN LYON could serve as a model for an attentive fiancé. All the time that Bebe Daniels has been working on Rio Rita, he spent so much time on the set that they have almost come to look on him as a member of the company. Every day that Bebe was working on location, about forty miles up the San Fernando valley, Ben flew out in his plane to visit her. There were very few landing places in the rolling country, so Ben chose the fairway of a nearby golf course as the only available landing spot.

"They've caught me at it three or four times now," said Ben, "and every time I've told them I had to make a forced landing. I've got to think up a new one pretty soon, I'm afraid, or they will begin to think there's something funny about always running out of gas at the same spot."

Hollywood in Who's Who

THE 1929 edition of Who's Who in America contains in its lists of constructive celebrities, the names of John Gilbert, Conrad Nagel, Eleanor Boardman, King Vidor, Cecil B. De Mille, Byron Morgan, Paul Bern, Tully Marshall, Hobart Bosworth, Mary Pickford, D. W. Griffith, Charles Chaplin, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, George Fawcett, Gloria Swanson and Alfred Allen.

Five years ago the book listed only two screen celebrities, Griffith and Chaplin.

Attention, Husbands!

BETTY COMPSON is being directed by her husband, James Cruze, in The Great Gabbo. Betty is a dancer. Dressed in tights, she was posing for a still.

She called to Mr. Cruze, "Do my legs look better this way? Or this way?"

Mr. Cruze grinned, "They look good no matter what you do with them."

Temperamental Tarzan

IT WAS during the filming of The Dark Horse at Universal. A shot called for the appearance of Tarzan, the horse, which shares honors with Ken Maynard.

"Sorry, sir, but Tarzan's gone to lunch," someone answered. So the company followed the horse's example. Later in the afternoon, another call was issued and Tarzan was again missing. Investigation found he had escaped to join a large group of horses tethered not far distant.

"Guess we'd better shoot another scene," grinned Maynard. "Tarzan can't be disturbed; he's in conference."

was my own radio that was playing! I had forgotten to turn it off the night before!"

Gwen Lee's Diet Idea

GWEN LEE, of course, isn't a bit plump, really. Nevertheless, she decided to go on the famous eighteen-day diet.

Somebody asked her about it, the other day.

"You don't," the friend said, "seem a bit thinner."

"Oh, I ate it all up in two days," retorted Gwen. "I just thought, what's the use of fooling along with it?"

Mabel Normand Recovering

MABEL NORMAND—wonder of the age—is slowly but surely recovering. She is up every day, and out in the sunshine of her patio, at her Beverly Hills home. Her bronchial tubes were badly affected, but are getting better.

Here's something we've found out since Mabel was ill. Several years ago, she pledged a certain amount of supplies to a tuberculosis hospital for ex-soldiers of the World War, down in Arizona. The pledge was made with the explicit understanding that it was to be kept a secret. And it has been, up to this time. But every year the supplies are sent, and the boys don't know who their benefactress is.

Tom Mix and Wife Together

WHATEVER faults people may find in Victoria Mix, they cannot say that she isn't loyal to Tom in his troubles.

No sooner did Mrs. Mix hear of Tom's problem with the Government about his income tax, than she hurried home from Europe.

She and Tom have taken a little house at Venice, and are leading a happy, quiet, unostentatious life, far away from the big estate, the French drawing room and Venetian bedrooms in Beverly Hills. Little Thomasina Mix worships her dad, and is happy to be with him again.

Thomasina and big Tom ride horseback along the shore at Venice at low tide, and are completely happy.

Tom is a versatile person. He has a store of learning gained from outdoor life, and this Thomasina is eager to learn. He knows about tides and seashells and crabs and sand fleas—the lore of the sea.

And all this he teaches his little girl during their rides and walks. Of course Thomasina can both swim and ride.

Hollywood's Latest Sheik

THERE is always a king-pin sheik in Hollywood. Now with John Gilbert out of the way, it looks as though his place were going to be filled by Grant Withers.

Grant is one of these quiet young fascinators. He has a way with him. He has humor and gallantry—and an air of holding off that is very provocative.

Into the bargain, he is really one of the finest and most manly young men in the film business. And of course everybody remembers that he was a hero in one of the big floods which swamped Boulder, Colorado, a few years ago.

It is whispered now that Grant and Loretta Young are as good as engaged.

Clara Bow's Engagement

AND now Clara Bow is really and truly engaged to Harry Richman, to whom Lily Damita was rumored engaged only a few short weeks ago.

Clara, we always thought, would wed one of these strong, silent athletes for whom she has such a penchant.

They are going, Clara and Harry, on their wedding trip to Europe—Clara's first trip. Clara wants to see Paris, of course, but do you know where she wants most to visit? In Ireland! She has some Irish ancestors, who dwelt near the Lakes of Killarney, and she means to hunt up a family tree.

Hail and Farewell

GLADYS BROCKWELL, one of the finest actresses the screen has ever known, recently passed away, following an automobile accident in which her car flew off the road, landing 75 feet down a mountain side.

One deeply sorrowing heart is Billie's. Billie is Billie Brockwell, Gladys' mother. She was but fifteen years old when Gladys was born, and they were always like sisters.

Gladys had become a deeply devoted Christian Scientist during the past year, and that faith also sustains Billie.

Gladys had always been singularly free from illness, it being related of her that she never was ill a day in her life. Her accident, while tragic, was merciful in one way. She suffered little if any. Some one sent her a telegram the morning after she was taken to the hospital. Evidently her injuries had stunned her. The telegram read, "Heard of Gladys' serious injury. Sympathy to you both."

Gladys had only one or two lucid moments. One occurred when the telegram was received.

"Why, Billie," she said—she always called her mother Billie—"Am I as ill as that?"

She leaves her mother well provided for. She had many talents, including one for drawing and architecture. At one time she designed, had built, and sold several houses, one after another, making a good deal of money in this way.

Taking the Talkie Test

elaborate, for she played in vaudeville and stage skits, took dancing lessons, and changed her whole screen personality. But voice lessons did not figure in it to any great extent. She paid far more attention to dancing.

When beginning in pictures, Bessie played demure little flappers, and when talking pictures came in she decided to switch to dancing and singing rôles, such as she plays in The Broadway Melody. Vaudeville experience had made her an accomplished jazz dancer, but she took up other forms, so that when she went into The Hollywood Revue of 1929, she was able to perform almost any type of dance.

"It was a case of changing personalities and learning the things that went with the new personality," she says, "rather than any training of voice."

"Clear enunciation and a fair volume," says Douglas Shearer, recording engineer in charge at the M-G-M plant, "are really the only things the actor needs, and these are basic, and hardly to be acquired by any training. I think that preparation is unnecessary in an experienced actor, save in the matter of possible speech defects. Of course every actor has to learn the trick of talking to the microphone, just as he had to learn camera angles in the silent drama, but this is not an arduous job. In many cases, exercises in correct breathing are a good thing for the actor, but as a rule an actor is an actor, whether it be on the screen or stage, and we find that he can work in either medium."

and his wife, Gus Edwards and tiny Armida, James Roche and Ezra Mir, Charles Chaplin, Harry D'Arrast, the George K. Arthurs, Karl Dane and many others.

ONE of the most elaborate social events of the month was the Mayfair Club dinner-dance at the Biltmore. The ballroom was converted into a grape arbor with the ceiling of paper roses, with petals falling on the dancers. The favors were tiny imported china animals.

Looking over the gay groups at the various tables, Irene Bordoni remarked that one might well be in New York, as all the well-known Manhattanites were present. There was Fay Bainter in Fred Niblo's party, with Ruth Chatterton, Ralph Forbes, John Colton and the Walter Moroscos (Corinne Griffith). There was Joe E. Brown with the John Boles. And Katherine Dale Owen, Kay Johnson, Charlotte Greenwood, George Arliss and Vivienne Segal.

In Richard Wallace' group were Sally Eilers, Nancy Carroll, Lupe Velez, Florence Hope, Eddie Sutherland, Gary Cooper, Paul Lukas and Arthur Lake.

Noted among the dancers were redhaired Merna Kennedy and James Hall, svelte Lina Basquette and her husband, Peverell Marley, William Ince and his new bride, Mary Philbin and Paul Kohner, Evelyn Brent and Harry Edwards.

UNIVERSAL'S Broadway première came to the Biltmore with all the fanfare of bright lights and well-known stars. Thousands of pink and white blossoms banked the entire orchestra pit and their sweet scent was wafted pleasantly to the audience.

Uncle Carl Laemmle and Junior were showered with congratulations. Rosabelle Laemmle (Mrs. Stanley Bergerman) looked very dainty and cool in pure white taffeta with a wrap of the same material. Blond Laura La Plante favored beige chiffon and Mary Philbin, shell pink trimmed in ostrich feathers. Merna Kennedy (described by Joseph Schildkraut as "the Universal cocktail of red hair and blue eyes") wore white maline, long and bouffant.

Thomas Jackson, who plays the drawling detective in Broadway and who walks away with most of the honors, held court in the lobby before and after the show. Paul Porcasi and his sweet young bride were also the recipients of much praise for Mr. Porcasi's wonderful work.

Joseph Schildkraut was master of ceremonies. An excellent choice, too.

Something that seemed to please the fans outside the theater happened when Joan Crawford and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., arrived. The radio announcer began his spiel: "Ah-ha, a treat! Here's Doug and Joan, everybody. Miss Joan Crawford and Mr. Douglas Fairbanks!" Joan drew herself up proudly and corrected him: "Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks, if you please!"

SUPPER and dancing and the showing of a new film filled the early hours of the Sunday night entertainment given by the George K. Arthurs, but the climax of the fun came with a moonlit plunge in the outdoor pool.

Joseph Farnham organized swimming matches, and Doris Lloyd, Mrs. Edwin Justus Mayer, Roland Young, Barton Hepburn, Basil Rathbone and Johnny Mack Brown carried off the prizes.

The United States of a Merrymaker

a large and fat man. There was no time to lose, so we stuffed out the uniform with bits of wadded newspaper until I filled it nicely, and had, in addition, the appearance of a splendid physique. All went well until on towards the end of the show when I had to go into a somewhat violent eccentric dance. Bit by bit the wadded paper dribbled out of the sleeves, oozed out of the neck, sloughed off at the waist, until I finished aghast, amid the roars of the audience, standing forlornly in the center of the stage, like a scarecrow in a paper snowstorm. Next slide, please, professor.

Tulsa, Oklahoma

Tulsa may be an oil town to the Chamber of Commerce, but to me it's the place where I almost married an Indian Princess. I used to see her out front, night after night. There was a lot to that girl. If you'd rolled her out, she would have been 12 feet tall.

One night she was waiting for me backstage, after the show. She came up to me and said, "Me have good tepee. Plenty heap big dough. You marry me. Come along live in tepee."

It sounded tempting, but there was too much of her for me. I knew that Indians had a horror of having their pictures taken, so I told her that I would marry her if she would go down to the photographer and have her picture taken with me. Imagine my embarrassment when she consented.

We had our picture taken together, and then I told her I must leave her for a few minutes to go back to my dressing room and pack my things. Luckily for me the show left town that night, or I might have been an Indian Prince today.

St. Louis, Missouri

This city stands out as a high light in my brief experience as a lion tamer. I was working with a show that carried a lion, and I was appointed the lion's chaperon.

In every town that we played, I'd get a boy to clean the lion's cage on promise that we would take him along with the show, which of course we never did.

When we hit St. Louis, a freckle-faced little cherub came down to get the job. Travel didn't improve the lion's disposition, and it hadn't been long since he had nipped off a keeper's arm in an angry moment. But the way we worked it, cleaning the cage was an easy job. We would push another cage up to the first one, open both doors, prod the lion into the second one while the boy cleaned the first one, then prod him back in again. I explained this to the boy and went on the stage. A few minutes later I returned, and there, to my horror, I saw the boy in the same cage with the lion, industriously scrubbing around him. And while I watched, he suddenly gave the lion a vicious whack on the rump with the scrubbing brush to get him to move over.

I couldn't make a move or a sound for fear of exciting the lion or the boy. But the lion submitted placidly and the boy finished his job and strutted out of the cage as though nothing in the world had happened. I guess those were the longest minutes I ever lived through.

Streator, Illinois

It's an odd little incident that makes Streator stick in my mind. I always went big for the races. I used to save my money carefully, then when I got about $1,500 I would go to the racetracks, in hope of pulling off the big cleaning, which, of course, I never made. I was always the one who got cleaned.

After one disaster, I landed in Streator with about 15 cents to my name and a very nifty overcoat which I had managed to save out of the wreckage.

I had to have a job, so I walked into a theater in town and put my proposition up to the manager. It was very warm in his office and he kept insisting that I take off my coat. But I shook my head and kept it on. Luckily, they were opening a show that night and had a part for me. There was some good comedy stuff in the last scene, in which I appeared as a bum.

When the show was over that night the manager came backstage.

"Well," I asked him, "how did you like it?"

"Great!" he replied, "and the best of all was your wardrobe for that tramp comedy stuff: Your bum's outfit was the most realistic I have ever seen. Where the devil did you get it?"

"Oh, that," I said, "is my own suit and the only one I've got to my name. I had it on under my swell overcoat in your office this afternoon, but I knew if you saw it, it would mean $50 off my pay check, so I kept my coat on."

New York

There are as many things that recall New York to me as there are lights on Broadway. Here's one of them.

I had just come in from a run in Chicago and had gone over to the Lambs' Club when they sent word that Jack Donahue, a friend of mine who was playing in Be Yourself, had taken ill and they wanted me to take his place at once.

We had time for only one rehearsal before the show went on and it lasted right up until the rise of the curtain. Because this was a special rehearsal for me, everybody went through it in his street clothes.

I went on the stage thinking everything was fine, only to discover that everyone who played with me in the first scene was wearing long white whiskers, which completely disguised the cast so that I had no idea who was who. I was lost in a forest of beards. I spoke my lines into thin air, trusting to luck that the right people would catch them.

Another time I was rehearsing for a very refined musical comedy, at the same time committing the lines for a skit, not so refined, to be given at the Lambs' Club. I was late for rehearsal, so I grabbed a script off my dresser and crammed the lines into my head as I rode to the theater in a taxi.

I arrived just in time to get in with my lines. The leading lady had made a very pretty romantic speech to which I replied, entering, all out of breath, "My God, where in Hell's the lunch?" They were just about to rush me to the psychopathic ward, when I discovered I had been reading the lines from the Lambs' Club skit.

Hollywood, California

I have just discovered Hollywood and am still busy making a specialized study of this strange locality. So far, it is to me the place where I can pick oranges for breakfast off trees in my own backyard.

Don't go yet, folks. Dr. Skelly's de luxe entertainment, The Dance of Life, will be seen shortly in the next tent, during which you will be accorded the privilege of buying Dr. Skelly's Gloom Eradicator.

Why I am Marrying Again

Monica. Wes, whose weakness is motoring through the wide-open spaces, would take her along on her days between pictures. Lisgar was a clever dancer and they spent two or three evenings a week at Cocoanut Grove.

"But we never talked about love," said Marian. "That was a word I had eliminated from my vocabulary."

That is, until she met Eddie Hillman!

REALLY," said Marian ,"I was honest with myself and with my friends when I said after my first unpleasant romance, that I would prepare for a future alone. I even went on doing that very thing for several months after I met Eddie."

But the coming of Eddie Hillman, the man who cared little for girls and less for motion picture people, changed more than one of Marian's plans.

They met for the first time, when Eddie stopped off in Hollywood with his team-mates before going on to Santa Barbara for the winter polo season. They were introduced, chatted a few minutes, and that was all—that is, so far as Marian was concerned.

He phoned twenty-four hours later. Then he phoned some more. But Marian always was busy.

Three weeks passed and one night Marian received a long-distance call from Santa Barbara. It was Eddie urging her to attend the polo game there the next day as his guest. Marian accepted.

It was then that Marian and Eddie really became acquainted.

Eddie's days were busy ones that kept him in Santa Barbara, what with daily practice and semi-weekly contests. However, it's just a nice drive to Hollywood in the evening, and Eddie drove it almost every night.

IT WASN'T long before he proposed to Marian. No, you guessed wrong! She didn't accept.

Then for fourteen days in a row, Eddie proposed again and again. Finally, his mother, Chicago society leader, began phoning each night from her home half-way across the continent, getting acquainted with her son's choice for a bride.

It would take a stronger person than this eighty-eight-pound Marian to continue obdurate against such a siege!

"The rest of Hollywood was no more surprised than was I myself when I announced our engagement," Marian declared. "I forgot my fears of another disillusionment because Eddie made me feel that I was such a terribly important thing in his life. He convinced me that I really mattered.

"But then, when you know Eddie's mother, you realize that Eddie would have to be quite a wonderful boy. She's the kind of a mother you dream about, but seldom meet."

Companionship, Marian believes, is necessary to happy wedlock.

EDDIE is so companionable, whether we are sitting alone at home or are out with a crowd of friends. We enjoy every minute we are in one another's company.

"I have suffered hardships and I think I know life well enough now to say that I am of an understanding nature. Our marriage will be lasting because we will go half-way with each other."

Marian will go on with her screen career despite the fact that Eddie Hillman is not enthusiastic about having her work.

"Eddie consented that I make two or three pictures a year because he thought it would make me happier," said Marian. "Eddie, too, is going to settle down out here and engage in some kind of business so that he will have something to occupy his time while I am at work."

Since the death of his father, Edward Hillman, Chicago merchant, a few years ago, Eddie has roamed the world with his twelve polo ponies and his trainers. He will go on playing polo, but he will limit the scope of his travels to Southern California.

Merna Kennedy—Youngster

legians. I enjoy traveling with that crowd — good, clean, unsophisticated kids."

DRIVING back to Hollywood after a crisp bacon and fragrant coffee breakfast proved an adventure. Not that it was particularly thrilling. It was just the opposite, in fact.

The solitude of this suburban district so near the very heart of noisy Hollywood and Los Angeles was enlightening. Merna must have sensed my feelings, for there was a quizzical expression in her green eyes when she offered me a 1929 penny for my thoughts, and then promptly interrupted herself by saying: "That is precisely why I take these before-sunrise jaunts so often. I think it gives me strength to meet Hollywood in the day that follows and look her square in the eyes."

Merna's mother, who was married when she was fourteen, and looks more like her daughter's older sister now, met us on our return to their Sunset Boulevard apartment and jumping into the car (by the way, Merna drives the family coupé, not a dashing roadster, as you would expect) drove over to deliver me safely at my own front gate. Nothing hectic about that jaunt!

Impressions? I didn't get any. How could I, when Merna Kennedy loves to mingle with gay crowds, but never discloses her identity at a movie première; is fond of dogs and monkeys, but doesn't own any; is enraptured by Rachmaninoff's music, but can do an amazingly authentic Varsity Drag; is considered forthcoming star material by Dr. Paul Fejos, who directed her in Broadway, but prefers light comedy rôles; is an ardent devotee of Mary Roberts Rinehart, O. Henry, and Theodore Dreiser; dislikes telephones and trains, but adores huge arm-chairs, steamers, and airplanes?

Lois Moran's Sketch Book

and the coast. Tours is on the Loire River, and you wouldn't think you pronounced it that way. Your tongue does a pirouette when you say it and then you smile pleasantly at yourself to think you said it nicely. Madame Aubigeult is a war widow. There are many in France. She has a pension and four pensionnaires, English and American families.

Gladys decided that we might as well learn to speak the best French that is spoken, rather than some incorrect patois. That is why we have come to Tours. (Hollywood, 1929. Knowledge of French has been invaluable, especially when I have been directed by French directors—Maurice Tourneur, for instance, and even George Fitzmaurice, who also speaks so well in English.) As soon as the school opens in October, after harvest, I shall go there and spend week-ends with Gladys at the pension. Madame Aubigeult has a daughter who is to teach me French so I will know a little about it before I start in the Lycee. The school is called Lycee de Tours. Foreign students pay double, but the resident pupils pay a very small price, for it is a government school.

ANATOLE FRANCE has a wee house near Tours. On bright days I cycle past, hoping to see him. They say he is very old and has a white goatee. The house has few windows. It seems like a little blind house. The windows are at the very top, under the eaves. A garden, all bright-colored flowers and fragrant, is behind a little fence. Josephine, his housekeeper, guards him like a dragonet. Gladys gave me The Revolt of the Angels, by him, which I love.

December 25. The French do not celebrate Christmas as we do. To them it has deep religious significance. They spend the day in worship. New Year's Day is their day of celebration. It is then that Pere de Noel, which is French for Santa Claus and means Father Christmas, leaves presents in the sabots that are placed by the fireside. Sabots are wooden shoes and if you have been a bad girl, the children believe, Pere de Noel will leave but ashes in your shoes. If you are good, you may expect oranges, fruits, nuts and little gifts.

MADAME AUBIGEULT had a Yankee dinner on Christmas day for her pensionnaires. She had turkey, dressing, cranberries. It was all very delightful. It was snowing and she had a Christmas tree. There were carols at night, just as in America. I think, perhaps, we were a little lonely.

March 1, 1921. This is St. David's Day, and also my birthday. St. David is the patron saint of the Welsh and I have Welsh blood in my veins; and English and German and Irish blood, too. Today, because it was my birthday and I was glad, mother and I went again to the Cathedral. It is so beautiful. It looks like a rare piece of old lace, the blue sky gleaming through its network of spires. I love it very much.

May 23. We are now at the Victoria Palace on the Left Bank. The Left Bank overlooks the Seine River. Many artists are here. Mother has engaged a tutor for me. His name is Michael; he is young; and he has blue eyes and black hair. He is Irish, from Dublin. The purest English is spoken in Dublin, Gladys says, so why not learn it? Gladys also says that she has always thought a young girl could learn more from a personable young man than she could from a funny old fossil. I am inclined to believe her.

June 3. We have moved to a little apartment on the Boulevarde Raspail. Paris is very lovely. Spring was beautiful here with the chestnut trees blooming. Michael, when we are not studying, takes me to the Jardin des Plantes. It is nicer than the Bois, which is full of picnickers. I can learn Spanish as well at the Jardin as at home. We have been to Notre Dame, too. I love it even better than the Cathedral at Tours. It seems so benign and all-comforting, a very mellow and glowing thing that has come down through the ages. Michael says it is a very fine piece of architecture.

September 3. It is all very confusing. I asked the man in the metro who La Pompadour was and he smiled and said, "She was a very famous king's mistress." At Versailles, in the beautiful garden that leads to the Petit Trianon, there is an Allee de Maintenon and the guide book said, she, too, was a king's mistress. On every hand in Paris, it seems, you meet evidence of women so immortalized. I have it reasoned out that they must have been very wonderful women who ruled their kings, and so were called kings' mistresses. Sort of glorified governesses. I must ask Gladys.

February 25, 1922. Mother has just discovered that I have been going, unescorted, to dancing lessons in the Montmartre district. Someone told her that Place Pigalle and Place Clichy were not the proper places for me to go alone. But I am not afraid. There is nothing to hurt me. The men in Paris are very playful. They approach you on the street and say, "Bon jour, mademoiselle," and smile pleasantly. Beyond that I do not know what they do; for I smile in return and say, "How do you do?" and walk hurriedly on. It always works. They are so amazed at my answer that they are left standing with their mouths agape. They are very amusing. So were the little boys in Tours who used to do the same thing.

June 23. It would be very pleasant to go to college if I did not want to dance. I think I could dance until I died. I am taking ballet from Szboda, the Russian, for three hours in the morning.

July 14. Never was there a Bastille Day like this, all glittering with sunshine, and confetti sifting down. Michael and I went forth early to celebrate with the rest of the French Republic. It's like America's Independence Day, only more so. There are mobs of shrieking people swirling up and down the avenues all day long, and dancing, and embraces.

EVERYBODY is in carnival spirit. The little street cafés sell bottles and bottles of wine. The pastry merchants do great business. At night there are fireworks, lovely spinning wheels like those King Louis ordered for the regattas at Versailles; and rockets and flares. I was so tired when I got home. When I removed my chemise, confetti, like little colored raindrops, spattered the floor. Oh, it was a mad day, but beautiful.

November 3. I walked into l'Opera the other day and asked the ballet mistress if I could dance in the ballet. She seemed quite amazed that I did not have a patron. It is considered the thing to do in Paris; have someone sponsor you. But I wanted to dance and that seemed the best way to go about it. The ballet mistress is very young and pretty and a Swiss. In the mornings, from 9 to 12, I dance with Szboda and from 2 to 5, I dance in the Opera. We wear little black knitted garments, with short chiffon slips, for rehearsal. And the Delcroz dance system is used. The routine is not too difficult. Three nights a week I dance at l'Opera, too. It is thrilling, all the lights and the costumes, all gauzy, and the faces and the odor of perfumes and flowers that streams over the footlights. The other nights of the week I am home with Gladys and usually go to bed early.

January 15, 1923. Michael's friend, Harold Brown, a photographer, has taken some pictures of me in sports costumes. (Hollywood, 1929. Harold is now in Santa Barbara, has a studio there. I saw him not more than a month ago when I went on location for Joy Street there.) The pictures are rather nice. Marcel L'Herbier of Cinegraphic, a French motion picture concern, saw them at Harold's studio and asked to meet me. He wants me to appear in a motion picture he is making, The Gallery of the Monsters. In it I shall be the forlorn mother of a little baby, trouping with a circus sideshow, and I shall wear a black wig. We are going to Italy to make some scenes. Gladys and I think it would be a pleasant experience. I gave my first solo dance at l'Opera not long ago. It was in Falstaff.

March 7, 1924. M. L'Herbier is arranging to make another picture. This time we shall go to Spain and make The Living Dead Man. M. L'Herbier has a very nice friend, Maurice Silver. We have good times together. (Hollywood, 1929. Maurice Silver has just finished the direction of the Fox Movietone Follies, in which I had a part. It seemed like dear old Paris days again.) I am very anxious to go to Spain. I want to walk the Street of Flowers in Barcelona, and see Madrid and the Court of the Lions of the Alhambra.

September 3, 1925. Samuel Goldwyn, the motion picture producer from Hollywood, is at the Ritz. He is looking for an actress to play Juliet to the Romeo of Ronald Colman, his star. I should like to play it. I have written Mr. Goldwyn a letter, in answer to his advertisement in the paper, and he has asked Gladys and me to call. An artist, a friend, says I would make a rather fine Juliet. I hope Mr. Goldwyn thinks the same way.

September 7. He did! We are sailing in a few days. Back to America! I'm so thrilled and happy, and, yet, I am sad. I am sad at leaving France. I wish we could dash down to Tours to say farewell there. But we have no time. We must pack. Farewell France. Gladys and I shall return.

Lily Damita from Gay Paree

work very hard and I learn all Mistinguette's song and dances.

Pretty soon my dream come true. Mistinguette she go away from the Casino forever and I am become the première danseuse.

I Meet the Prince of Wales

NOW is the beginning for me of the gayest time in my life. The biggest people in Europe, they are become my friends. There are always parties, parties, such good times as we have!

One day I go to sit for my portrait at the studio of Drian, who is one of the most famous portrait painters in all Europe. I have just finish sitting for my picture and have gone into the dressing room to change into my street clothes.

In a few minutes comes M. Drian knocking on my door. He say, "Lily, hurry and dress. There are two nice boys here would like to meet you." I am very much excited. I hurry so I can hardly get my makeup on right.

Then I come out and he say, "Lily, I want you to meet the Prince of Wales. And this is his brother, Prince George."

They are so natural and so unaffected, these boys, you never would think they are princes. We become good friends right away. I invite them to come and see me dance at the Casino. So they come that same night and afterwards we all go out to a grand supper party together.

They come often to the Casino after that and we go on many supper parties together. I like both of the boys so much. But I see Prince George more often than the Prince of Wales. We are, however, just what you call good comrades. We have many good times together. But he never speak to me of love. But some of my happiest times I have with him. I will tell you more about him later.

ALWAYS, wherever you go, it is the same crowd. The same faces, the same names, the names you see in the papers often. There are the Dolly Sisters, Pearl White, the Marquis de la Falaise, M. Letelliere, Mrs. Nash, and many others. For a while it is fine. It is nice to go everywhere and always have your friends. But always in my life I come soon to the time when I would like something new, something different. It is not long that I wish that before my chance come. It is always like that for me in my life. I wish for something very hard and I get it.

Making Movies in Vienna

THEY ask I should come to Vienna and make a motion picture for the Fellner Company. I am glad to go, to leave Paris awhile, to leave all the people that I know so well and to meet new ones, so I go to Vienna.

In my very first picture I am starred. It is called Red Heels and I play a dancing girl like I do on the stage. It is very big success, this first picture, so when they want me to go to Berlin to make more pictures for the same company, I go quick.

All this time I am working so hard in pictures I do not have an opportunity to think of love. Then, all of a sudden, in the wink of an eye, it happen to me.

The Ambassador from Spain, whom I have known, invite me to a large dinner party at the Spanish Embassy in Berlin. Many of the nobility and the big political people of Germany are there.

I see across from me way down the table a beautiful tall blond boy with nice blue eyes. He look at me with those eyes. We smile at each other.

When dinner is over the Spanish Ambassador he bring him up and introduce him to me. He is Louis Ferdinand, a grandson of the Kaiser. His father had been the Crown Prince of Germany. He was then a student at the University of Berlin.

He ask me then if he can take me home in his car. We drive together through the empty streets in the early morning and talk and talk about many things. He is such a nice boy I am at once very fond of him. He has, too, a very strong personality. He tell me all about his ambitions, how he want to make his own way in the world as a business man and forget all about being a prince.

When he leave me at the door he ask if he can come see me again and I am happy.

Love Comes to Me

THAT is the beginning of a very sweet romance. We dine together at the little cafés in Berlin. We go to many parties together. There are wonderful dances in the big gloomy palace at Potsdam where the royal family have lived.

He tell his family so much about me he want me to meet them. So he take me home to dinner with them. I am afraid that it will be very solemn, but they are very kind to me, and laugh and joke and make me feel much at home.

All this time Prince Ferdinand is falling in love with me and I do not know it. Then one night when we are out riding he ask me to marry him. I laugh. I think it is nothing serious, that he is just a boy who is infatuated with an actress and that he will soon get over it. So I tell him he is much, much too young to think about such things, that he must think about his career first and then it is time enough to talk about marriage. I tell him besides that I have my career and I cannot think of marrying. He tell me to never mind about all that, some day he is going to marry me.

So that night, the prince, he go home and tell his family he is going to marry Lily Damita. They laugh, too. They think like I do it is just puppy love, that he will soon get over it.

But he does not get over it. Pretty soon I see that he is feeling very badly about it. I do not tease him any more. I am sorry now, because he is such a nice boy. I am so fond him and I do not want I should hurt him. I see now he cannot forget me so easily while I am there. So I make up my mind I go away. Then it will be easy for him to forget me. In a few hours I pack up my things and leave Berlin to go to Paris.

A New Love Enters

IT IS funny the way things happen. I am only in Paris very few days when I hear that Samuel Goldwyn want to see me. He have seen some of my pictures, they tell me, and want to know more about me. I have heard much about him in Europe and so I am anxious I should meet him. One day I go to see him. I find I like him very much.

He say to me, "Lily, how would you like to come to America and make pictures for me?"

I shrug my shoulders. I have not think much about America.

I say to him, "What for should I go to America to make pictures? I have my friends here. I have the little success. Maybe I do not like America."

He say, "Well, all right, if you do not like it, you can come home any time you want. But it is the great country. There is a chance there for you to make big success. You come with me. You make a picture with Ronald Colman. Then if you are unhappy I will send you home."

"Make a picture with Ronnie, hein?" I say. I have always like Ronnie. "Well I will think about it."

I go home and I think and I think. It is a great chance to see new people, new faces, to travel. And Louis Ferdinand, he is still feeling badly. If I put an ocean between him and me, it will surely be all over, I think. Ah, how foolish I was! So I call Mr. Goldwyn on the phone and I say sure, I go with you.

So three days later I am on the ocean with Mr. and Mrs. Goldwyn, headed for America.

Did Louis Ferdinand manage to forget Lily? Not for long. Read how another glamorous chapter was added to their romance against the gay background of Hollywood. Other adventures of the little French girl in a strange land, including the madcap adventure which brought this displeasure of the British Admiralty down upon Prince George will be told in the November issue of SCREEN SECRETS Out October 10.

Which Part Is Too Fat?

From Any Part of Body You Wish Reduced

THIS NEW WAY

New Discovery Amazing Legions Who Failed to Reduce by Other Treatments and Methods

No Drugs, Diets, Exercise, Apparatus, Baths or Danger to Health to Be Feared!

5 to 10 Pounds Off in Two Weeks!

A new discovery now makes it possible for over-stout people to quickly reduce double chin, or fat bust, arms, abdomen, hips, legs or ankles at home. It's so easy and harmless that thousands who failed through other means are now getting amazing results in a few days' time.

This new external product is a white, dainty paste which you rub into any fat part you wish to reduce, at night, as you would a cream. But it is not a cream and does not contain a drop of water. And the effects are almost magic-like. The parts treated with this new scientific creation, called "COLLIPASTE," are quickly reduced in size and weight, because the paste penetrates and brings about a physiological reaction, heating the surplus fat layers under the skin, the excess fat then actually oozes out through the opened pores with excreted moisture, like perspiration.

Slenderizing the figure this new, easy way is meeting with hearty approval by physicians who warn against dangerous drugs and starvation diets. The success of COLLIPASTE will surely revolutionize methods of reducing, because it is pleasant and healthful to use at night, and works while you sleep. Get a jar now and take away those ugly, fatty, burdensome parts.

Send no money, simply mail coupon below to Dermolay Laboratories, Dept. 111A No. 1700 Broadway, New York, N. Y., for jar costing only $1.95. On arrival pay postman. If you are not more than pleased with reduction, your money will be refunded. Print address plainly.

Many Testimonials
Miss A. B. writes: "I have lost six pounds in two weeks. It really reduces the parts you use it on. I started reducing my hips and stomach and already feel like a new person."

remembered the fellow and several firemen went galloping into the operating room to try to save him. But when they got there they found that the Scotchman had gone. Only his brain remained lying there on the table, undisturbed.

"And when do you suppose the Scotchman was found?" Al asks. And answers: "Years later, teaching school in Ireland."

Oil's Well

JOHN D.'S broken into the movies. On his ninetieth birthday, several Fox News cameramen crashed the verboten gates of Pocantico Hills, New York, to snap a few pictures of the Erl Koenig even if they had to sneak 'em from ambush, like it was on a Martin Johnson hunting expedition, Mawruss.

But there was no need for underhand work. John met them and consented to pose—for the first time in all his Kliegless career. He not only posed as the cameraman directed him, but he showed the lads all over his enormous estate and picked his own places for closeups. He even selected a group of statues (females, nude) as a background and seemed to get a particular kick out of standing in rather close and slightly questionable proximity to the ladies. Later, when the film was developed and flashed on the studio projecting room screen, it was found necessary to cut these scenes. They were rather suggestive. American youths must not be undermined by disturbing thoughts. I get hot thinking about it. To judge from John M. Winkler's recent irreverent biography about him, John D. never was one to neglect a good, honest look at a passing trim ankle.

Peck's Bad, Bad Boys

THESE two Katzenjammer Kids of the screen, press, pulpit and stage, Charles MacArthur and Ben Hecht, have been cutting a wide swath hereabouts with movie contracts for original stories. They have the industry in their hip pockets; everybody wants their stories. MacArthur, as any good li'l Patsy knows, was co-author of the smash, Lulu Belle, done with Edward Sheldon and the smash, The Front Page, done with Ben Hecht. Ben, you know, wrote Underworld for Paramount and completely changed the face of the screen for a while. He is directly responsible for the movie crime wave. Personally, there are times I feel he deserves a good spray of machine gun bullets for some of the atrocious imitations his Underworld has begotten. But since Underworld was so good—probably the best movie made in America—come home, Ben, all is forgiven.

Hecht and MacArthur are going to write a talkie to be known as The Homicide Squad. Curiously, it will deal with just that branch of the police department of Chicago, where the authors served as crime reporters on sundry newspapers. They know their underworld.

MacArthur, by the way, is wedded to Helen Hayes, actress. When Old Master Woollcott, who lives in the image of George Eliot, heard of the wedding, he said waggishly: "Every young girl ought to marry Charles MacArthur once."

VICTOR McLAGLEN'S expected East soon on a wheeling tour through the larger cities: his first trip away from Hollywood in a dinosaur's age . . . Herbert Brenon, having finished Lummox for United Artists, is here conferring with RKO about his next, thus far, nameless . . . . Al Jolson will do one more for Warners and then go over to United Artists in April . . . Alice Joyce is back from Hollywood where she played opposite George Arliss in his talkie version of The Green Goddess. Alice, you know, is a New Yawk girl, hailing off Park Avenue, where she has a wealthy husband, two children, diamonds, cahs, joolery, and money to burn . . . Do you remember George Jessel's gag about the Warners? He said: "Three years ago the Warners had $17. Today they owe eleven millions!" . . . Paramount has paid Havelock Ellis ten thousand good hard dollars for his title, The Dance of Life. Guess what it's going to be applied to. The talkie version of the play, Burlesque, so help me Hannah! . . . The word comes that all's quiet and serene in Ireland at Moore Abbey, where John McCormack is making his singie for Fox . . . Ditto from the Metro company way out Africa way, making whoopee with Trader Horn's precious paragraphs . . . Lily Damita has been reported engaged more times than Man o' War. There have been, and seem to be no more, the Kaiser's grandson and Prince George of Old England, who danced with her when in Hollywood. . . . Do you know that Samuel Goldwyn came to New York recently and on meeting Dick Watts, the movie critic, said, "I'm glad to meet you, Mister Watts. I read your stuff regularly in the World." Watts is cineman for The Herald Tribune . . . While sitting at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer offices, a radio came in from some Hollywood press agent to the effect that Dorothy Sebastian, Anita Page and Gwen Lee were cheering on the endurance flight boys and tossing hot soup up to them. How tough it is on these press agents to earn their money . . . Does it interest you that I think female movie critics are the lowest form of humanity . . . that I think Rudy Vallee is just what every sensible male thinks he is . . . that I know a girl so dumb she thinks hari-kari is a movie actor? . . . It doesn't? Well, what about it? I'm through for the month anyway.

And not stopping with this gigantic VALUE, Spear offers the most liberal of FREE CREDIT TERMS—only $1 with order, 30 days FREE home trial, a whole Year to Pay. No home can afford to be without this wonderful suite at this price and on these easy terms.

This luxurious suite would sell for $90 and up, anywhere else. It's the newest in furniture! Velour living room suites are the latest fashion. The newest in lamps, too—the new style matched set, all 3 the same color. How can we offer such a remarkable value? Well, here's the secret! It's original with Spear. We made the Davenport a few inches shorter than the usual models (the costly kind)—saved inches to shave dollars off the price. You'll never realize it. You would never know, if we didn't tell you. You'll have to measure it yourself to find the difference. It's a highly practical size.

This Davenport is 64 in. wide overall, instead of the usual 72 in. Then we dispensed with the costly removable cushions—another Big Saving. The surprising thing is that most people like this Davenport better. In short, we kept the quality, eliminated the frills. Davenport is 64 in. wide overall. 52 in. wide between arms. Back 19 in. high. There are 18 coil springs in the seat.

Another striking feature of this suite is the new style Club Chair and Club Rocker to match the Davenport. Suite is built with sturdy Hardwood frames, in beautiful brown Mahogany finish. Covering of serviceable blue and taupe Figured Velour, drawn smooth and snug over sanitary interior upholstering materials. Extra comfortable. Extra sturdy. Club chair and rocker 32 in. wide overall. Seats 21 x 20 in. Backs 21 in. high. 5 coil springs in the seat of each chair, well padded. The ideal size for modern home.

30 Days FREE Trial

HALLELUJAH

A Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ALL-TALKING ALL-SINGING PRODUCTION

DIRECTED by KING VIDOR
Who Made "The BIG PARADE"

"Like little children that ain't growed up"

"Soon forgotten were the fields of cotton"

CLAP yo' hands! Slap yo' thigh! "Hallelujah" is here! "Hallelujah" the great! "Hallelujah" the first truly epic picture portraying the soul of the colored race. Destined to take its place in filmdom's Hall of Fame along with "The Big Parade," "The Broadway Melody" and "The Hollywood Revue." King Vidor wrote and directed this stirring all-negro drama, this absorbing story of the colored boy, indirectly responsible for his young brother's death in a gaming house brawl, who becomes a negro revivalist; of his devotion to his ideals; and of his craving for a seductive "yaller girl." ¶ The soul of the colored race is immortalized in "Hallelujah." Every phase of their picturesque lives—their fierce loves, their joyous, carefree pursuit of happiness, their hates and passions—finds dramatic expression against vivid backgrounds of cabarets, cotton fields, gaming houses, and humble shacks called home. ¶ Daniel Haynes, noted Negro singer, plays the central character. Nina Mae McKinney, a beauty discovered in the night clubs of Harlem, has the leading feminine role. In addition, the celebrated Dixie Jubilee Singers and other noted performers sing the songs of the negro as they have never been sung before. Don't miss this tremendous event in the history of the screen!

Now playing simultaneously at the Embassy and the Lafayette Theatre, N. Y. Twice Daily

Amazingly Easy Way to get into ELECTRICITY

Don't spend your life waiting for $5.00 raises in a dull, hopeless job. Now . . . and forever . . . say good-bye to 25 and 35 dollars a week. Let me show you how to qualify for jobs leading to salaries of $50, $60 and up, a week, in Electricity—NOT by correspondence, but by an amazing way to teach, that makes you a practical expert in 90 days! Getting into Electricity is far easier than you imagine! Act now, today!

Learn Without Books in 90 DAYS

LACK of experience—age or advanced education bar no one. I don't care if you don't know an armature from an air brake—I don't expect you to! I don't care if you're 16 years old or 40—it makes no difference! Don't let lack of money stop you. Most of the men at Coyne have no more money than you have.

Railroad Fare Allowed

I will allow your railroad fare to Chicago, and if you should need part-time work I'll assist you to it. Then, in 12 brief weeks, in the great roaring shops of Coyne, I train you as you never dreamed you could be trained . . . on the greatest outlay of electrical apparatus ever assembled . . . costing hundreds of thousands of dollars . . . real dynamos, engines, power plants, autos, switchboards, transmitting stations . . . everything from doorbells to farm power and lighting . . . full-sized . . . in full operation every day!

No Books—All Actual Work

No books, no baffling charts . . . all real actual work . . . building real batteries . . . winding real armatures, operating real motors, dynamos and generators, wiring houses, etc., etc. That's a glimpse of how we make you a master practical electrician in 90 days, teaching you far more than the average ordinary electrician ever knows and fitting you to step into jobs leading to big pay immediately after graduation. Here, in this world-famous Parent school—and nowhere else in the world—can you get such training!

Prepare For Jobs Like These

Here are a few of hundreds of positions open to COYNE-trained men. Our free employment bureau gives you lifetime employment service.

Armature Expert — up to $100 a Week
Substation Operator — up to $65 a Week
Auto Electrician — $60 a Week and up
Inventor - - - Unlimited
Maintenance Engineer — up to $100 a Week
Service Station Owner — $60 a Week and up
Radio Expert — $60 a Week and up

Jobs, Pay, Future

Don't worry about a job, Coyne training settles the job question for life. Demand for Coyne men often exceeds the supply. Our employment bureau gives you lifetime service. Two weeks after graduation, Clyde F. Hart got a position as electrician with the Great Western Railroad at over $100 a week. That's not unusual. We can point to Coyne men making up to $600 a month. $60 a week is only the beginning of your opportunity. You go into radio, battery or automotive electrical business for yourself and make up to $15,000 a year.

AVIATION ELECTRICITY

I am including my new Aviation Electricity course as well as Radio and Automobile Electrical courses to all who enroll now.

Students wiring and checking ignition on one of the late type Radial Aircraft Engines in our aviation department.

GET THE FACTS

Coyne is your one great chance to get into electricity. Every obstacle is removed. This school is 30 years old—Coyne training is tested—proven beyond all doubt—endorsed by many large electrical concerns. You can find out everything absolutely free. Simply mail the coupon and let me send you the big, free Coyne book of 150 photographs . . . facts . . . jobs . . . salaries . . . opportunities. Tells you how many earn expenses while training and how we assist our graduates in the field. This does not obligate you. So act at once. Just mail coupon.

START TONIGHT AND REDUCE WEIGHT!

Start Reducing Tonight at Home and Feel Better Tomorrow Morning Than You Have For Months
(Every Statement Certified From Actual Experience)
SEND THE COUPON FOR YOUR FIRST THREE FAYRO BATHS

Thousands of smart women have found this easy way to take off excess weight once or twice a week. These women take refreshing Fayro baths in the privacy of their own homes.

Fayro contains many of the same natural mineral salts that make effective the waters of twenty-two hot springs of America, England and Continental Europe. For years the spas and hot springs bathing resorts have been the retreat of fair women and well groomed men.

Excess weight has been removed, skins have been made more lovely bodies more shapely, and minds brighter.

The Hot Springs Are Now Brought To You

A study of the analyses of the active ingredients of the waters from twenty-two of the most famous springs have taught us the secret of their effectiveness. You can now enjoy these benefits in your own bath. Merely put Fayro into your hot bath. It dissolves rapidly. You will notice and enjoy the pungent fragrance of its balsam oils and clean salts.

Then, Fayro, by opening your pores and stimulating perspiration, forces lazy body cells to sweat out surplus fat and bodily poisons. Add Fayro to your bath at night and immediately excess weight will have been removed in an easy, refreshing and asolutely harmless manner.

Fayro will refresh you and help your body throw off worn out fat and bodily poisons. Your skin will be clearer and smoother. You will sleep better after your Fayro bath and awaken feeling as though you had enjoyed a week's vacation.

Results Are Immediate

Weigh yourself before and after your Fayro bath. You will find you have lost weight. And a few nights later when you again add Fayro to your bath, you will once more reduce your weight. As soon as you are the correct weight for your height do not try to reduce further. No need to deny yourself wholesome meals. No need for violent exercise. No need for drugs or medicines. Merely a refreshing Fayro bath in the privacy of your own home.

Try Fayro At Our Risk

The regular price of Fayro is $1.00 a package. With the coupon you get 3 full sized packages and an interesting booklet "Health and Open Pores" for $2.50 plus the necessary postage. Send no money. Pay the postman. Your money refunded instantly if you want it. The booklet also contains dietetic lists and information compiled by eminent specialists.

June Collyer, screen beauty, says:

"enrich your beauty with really natural rouge"

You can have color which seems your own . . . but do you? Not mere faint tints, mind you, but color as deep and rich as you desire.

No great tragedy, you think, if rouge betrays itself? Possibly not. But that is because custom sanctions it, and not because your fastidious desire approves. Then what if beholders—especially men—might actually say of you, "she has the most marvelous complexion," all unknowing that you used rouge. Ah, that is a thought!

Always Complimented

Precisely this praise is the compliment always paid women who use Princess Pat Rouge. Nor is it the impossible thing it seems, judging by experience. You see there is a curious oddity about the human skin—never before taken into account. It does not possess definite color. Just try to name it. Actually the skin's tones are neutral, a background! Too, the skin is transparent. When Nature gives you color, she suffuses this neutral background from within!

How Color Comes to Life

Any harsh, flat, color you put upon your face will clash, inevitably.

This is known in making Princess Pat—and guarded against. There are, in Princess Pat, neutral undertones that come to life instantly as they are warmed by the skin. Too, the intense, brilliant overtones of Princess Pat Rouge have transparency, so that they do not blot out the skin tones. And so you have the secret, the scientific reason. Thus does Princess Pat Rouge give its marvelously lifelike color. Thus does it harmonize with every skin individually. Thus does your color seem actually to come from within. It is a most remarkable and beautiful effect.

And Now the Beautiful Princess Pat *Summer*tan Shade.

To the famous group of six Princess Pat shades has been added the "magic seventh." This is Princess Pat *Summer*tan—fashion's favorite for the tremendously popular sun tan mode. Princess Pat *Summer*tan Rouge gives instantly the accent to perfect tan—just where you want it. In *Summer*tan, as in actual tan, are the soft, dusky, golden tints and the note of lovely amber with ruby tints showing through. There is the same beautiful clearness found in actual tan; for the rich gypsy coloring gives perfect illusion of coming from within the skin.

No woman living can help wanting to try a rouge with all these advantages—one that gives beauty hitherto impossible. Your favorite shop shows all seven shades.

FLASHES FROM HOLLYWOOD — CABLEGRAMS FROM EVERYWHERE

TIME RECEIVED Last Minute RECEIVED AT Screen Secrets FOR DELIVERY TO Our Readers

RUTH ELDER, the movie colony's star aviatrix, and Walter Camp, Jr., president of Inspiration Pictures, Inc., were married in New York City. The couple met five months ago in Hollywood, and the engagement was announced while Miss Elder was en route to the Women's Air Races in Cleveland.

Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford announce a three months' trip abroad. They will visit England, France and Italy. Their co-starring picture, The Taming of the Shrew, will be given its New York première soon.

Lewis Milestone has been signed by Universal to direct their big special, All Quiet on the Western Front, based on the widely-read novel of the same name.

Hollywood was presented with a surprise when Janet Gaynor and Lydell Peck filed their intention to wed and announced plans for an immediate marriage. Mr. Peck is a prominent Los Angeles attorney.

Laura La Plante will be co-starred with John Boles in a big Universal special, tentatively titled La Marseillaise.

Rudy Vallee has arrived in Hollywood to start his first picture for RKO. He was met at San Bernadino by a group of film notables, who boarded his special train for the last few miles into Hollywood.

Lionel Barrymore, who deserted the footlights for a megaphone, has been signed on a long-term directing contract by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Joe E. Brown is being starred by Tiffany-Stahl in a circus picture called Painted Faces, in which he will have plenty of opportunity to make use of his boyhood training as a trapeze artist.

Bebe Daniels has scored such a hit in Rio Rita, her first singing picture, that RKO has decided to star her in a musical version of Carmen, which she will sing in English. It is to be started around Christmas time.

Richard Dix has started work on his first picture for RKO, as yet untitled. He has been idle these many weeks while searching for just the proper vehicle that would please both him and the powers that be.

Climaxing a romance which had its inception when she came to Hollywood to star in Paramount pictures, Mary Eaton, former Ziegfeld Follies star, has become the bride of Millard Webb, who directed her in "Glorifying the American Girl", a musical extravaganza.

Untamed is the final title of the new Joan Crawford starring picture, which was made under the working title of Jungle.

Hollywood's newest "discovery" is Joan Marsh, fifteen-year-old high school girl, who has been signed by Universal for talking pictures.

Another screen beauty has married a director. Wedding bells rang for Patsy Ruth Miller and Tay Garnett, Pathé director. Beverly Hills was the scene of the wedding.

Leatrice Joy, having completed a six weeks' vaudeville tour, is to make a film in France, for the Gaumont Company. She will speak French in the picture, and will also make an English version.

Louis Wolheim, the only Caddo contract player who does not appear in Hell's Angels has been loaned to M-G-M for an important part in The Ship from Shanghai.

Out of the Night, the picture Henry King is making for Inspiration, and for which Lupe Velez has been borrowed from United Artists, has been re-christened Hell's Harbor.

Emily Fitzroy, noted character actress, has just returned to Hollywood after an extended European tour.

Mary Nolan's next picture will be Rope, which Universal is planning to produce on a lavish scale.

United Artists have decided to keep Lupe Velez at home a while, and are starring her in a talking, singing, dancing version of Norma Talmadge's old success, The Dove.

Win $1000.00 CASH

THIS OFFER IS OPEN TO EVERY READER OF THIS ANNOUNCEMENT.

It makes no difference who you are or where you live we want you to send us a name for our toothpaste. Whoever sends the most suitable name will win—nothing more is necessary to gain this cash prize of $1,000.

Nothing to Buy—Nothing to Sell

You can use a coined word or a word made by combining two or more words, such as "Snow-White," "Gum-Strength," etc., or any other name you might think would fit the high quality of this dental cream.

There is nothing to buy or sell—simply the person sending the best and neatest suggestion for a name will receive $1,000 cash prize or, if prompt, $1,100 in all.

ANY NAME MAY WIN

No matter how simple you think your suggestion is, you cannot afford to neglect sending it at once. Any name may win.

NAME THIS

Win this $1,000 cash prize by a few moments thought. How can you earn this amount of money easier or more quickly? Remember, there is no obligation! The person submitting the winning name will have nothing else to do to win the $1,000 and the extra $100, if prompt. In choosing a name bear in mind this dental cream is marvelous for teeth and gums. It is designed to sweeten the breath, beautify the teeth, cleanse cavities and promote teeth and gum health. The only thing necessary to win is to send the name we choose as the neatest and best suited for this dental cream. Only one name will be accepted from each contestant.

This unusual offer is only one of a number of offers embraced in our novel distribution plan, whereby those taking part may win any one of twenty-odd prizes, the highest of which is $3,500 cash. By participating in our distribution plan the winner of the $1,100 cash prize may win an additional $3,500, making a total of $4,600. Everyone sending a name regardless of whether it wins or not, will be given the same opportunity to win the $3,500 or one of the other cash prizes. Get busy with your suggestion at once—do not delay! Neglect may cost you thousands of dollars.

$100 EXTRA for PROMPTNESS

To get quick action I am going to pay the winner an extra $100 for promptness, or $1,100 in all—so send your suggestion AT ONCE!

Contest Rules

This contest is open to everyone except members of this firm, their employees and relatives.

Each contestant may send only one name. Sending two or more names will cause all names submitted by that person to be thrown out.

Contest closes November 30, 1929. Duplicate prizes will be given in case of ties.

To win the promptness prize of $100 extra, the winning name suggested must be mailed within three days after our announcement is read.

The Postal Pouch editor will answer for you any questions you ask concerning the movies. For a personal reply enclose with your letter a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

Hurry Back, Verna

VERNA P.: Yes, indeed, you are welcome in the Postal Pouch—not only this once, but as often as you want to come. Sue Carol is at the Fox Studios, Hollywood. She was born in Chicago on an October 30, about twenty-two years ago. Renée Adorée hails from Lille, France, and is twenty-seven years old. Don't forget I'm watching eagerly for your next letter!

K-K-Katy

KATHERINE S.: Where have you been all my life with those busy questions? Jack Mulhall is married. Dorothy Mackaill recently divorced Lothar Mendez, the director. Mary Brian was christened Louise Dantzler, and is just twenty-one years old. Dorothy Sebastian is twenty-six, while Nils Asther is twenty-seven. Hurry back to the Postal Pouch!

How to Become a Star

B. McG.: Wings was made by the Paramount Studios; Lilac Time and Naughty Baby by First National, Burbank; and Masks of the Devil by M-G-M, Culver City. See Buddy Rogers next in Illusion; Gary Cooper in The Virginian; Alice White in The Girl from Woolworth's; Clara Bow in The Saturday Night Kid, and Joan Crawford in Untamed. The first thing to do when you want to become a movie star is to get acquainted with Mr. Lasky, Mr. Goldwyn, Mr. Fox, and Mr. Griffith. Act as if you don't want a job under any circumstances, but wear real platinum jewelry, gorgeous furs, and simple little $500 frocks. Get a press agent who can convince the world that you are Hollywood's greatest gift to the movies—it can be done for $125 a week or so. Be sure you are a wonderful stage dancer, have had experience in dramatic productions, and be an opera singer if possible. The first thing to do when you want to become a movie star is get a stenographic job and be sure of the next meal!

She Draws Well

THE SEEGAR: Joan Crawford is twenty-four years old, has brown hair and blue eyes. She is married to Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. Yes, she reads her fan mail, but has a secretary to answer it, of course. "Red Head Bow" is twenty-three years old. Yes, I seem to remember the time when she was—well, rather plump; but she is quite svelte now. Maybe she lost weight reading one of your hefty letters!

Who Will Be Next?

John Boles

EVERY month one of the stars answers a letter received by Postal Pouch and sends to the writer an attractive, large photograph of himself. This month's lucky fan receives a portrait from John Boles. The winning letter and Mr. Boles' reply appear below.

Dear Postal Pouch Editor:

I would like some information about John Boles.

How old is he? When and where was he born? What pictures has he appeared in?

Best wishes to SCREEN SECRETS.

Very truly yours,
KATHERINE F.

My dear Katherine:

I was born in Greenville, Texas, twenty-eight years ago and since going into pictures I've played in Sunya, opposite Gloria Swanson. Then I played in We Americans, The Last Warning and Scandal, for Universal; The Desert Song, for Warner Brothers and Rio Rita, for RKO.

My next pictude will be a superproduction, which at present is called La Marseillaise, and this will be my first starring picture for Universal. It is a story about the man who wrote the French National anthem and I am thrilled about making it.

Sincerely,
JOHN BOLES.

Don't Crowd, Boys

JEAN P.: Jeans and Janes are popular here—especially the janes. Monte Blue is at Warner Brothers, Hollywood; Hoot Gibson at the Universal Studios, Universal City, and Marion Douglas at M-G-M, Culver City. Mary Pickford is at United Artists, Hollywood. Gloria Swanson is American.

Thank You!

STEWART A. J.: So you think SCREEN SECRETS is the best movie magazine you've ever read? Join the crowd on the right, and let the lonely ones on the left huddle together out in the cold. We're always tickled to death when we get a boost—unless it's with the business end of a boot. Billie Dove was born in New York City, on May 14, 1903. She is five feet five inches tall. William Haines was born in Staunton, Virginia, January 1, 1900. He is six feet tall, weighs one hundred and seventy-five pounds, has black hair and brown eyes. Both are American.

Zizz, Boom, Bah!

KAPI-S.: Are you a college yell or a new breakfast food? David Lee is very much alive, and is working on another Warner Brothers picture. Dolores Costello has just completed Second Choice, for Warners. Al Cooke and Alberta Vaughan have been appearing together in Darmour-F. B. O. Comedies. Kit Guard recently worked in Lingerie—and, no doubt, in B. V. D.'s Write to him at Tiffany-Stahl, and to Vera Reynolds at the Trem Carr Productions, Hollywood, where she recently made The Divine Sinner.

THE GAB BAG

¶ An open forum where readers may discuss their views on motion pictures.

Parsons, Kansas.

Dear Editor:

I think SCREEN SECRETS is a wonderful magazine and the October issue just can't be beat.

I certainly would like to see an article about Sally Blane. I think she is a very good actress. I also would like to see something about William Bakewell, whom I also think is fine.

Hoping I will see something about these players in SCREEN SECRETS soon.

Sincerely, F. H.

Editor's Note:

Watch closely for stories or pictures on Sally Blane and William Bakewell in future issues of SCREEN SECRETS and you will not be disappointed.

Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Sir:

Talking pictures are new, and, like all new things, are subject to controversy.

I am an optimist. I believe that in four or five years, the talkies will have been improved wonderfully. The talkies will better the quality of pictures generally, and for too long, motion pictures have been subjected to the criticism that they must be directed at the fifteen-year-old mind. I do not believe that this is true. Pictures can and will be made to interest people of all grades of intelligence.

I absolutely believe in talkies. They have put life in filmdom. This is the most wonderful thing that has happened for years in the motion picture industry.

Sincerely,

L. H.

Editor's Note:

Talkies are the most important topic of discussion in motion pictures today. It is the suggestions and criticisms by fans that will guide the producers in developing further this new entertainment. May we suggest that other readers with interesting observations offer them to the industry through these columns?

Winnipeg, Man.

Dear Editor:

Permit me to congratulate SCREEN SECRETS on the acquisition of Harmony Haynes as one of your writers.

In screen magazines, as in motion pictures, a new find is often a decided asset, and Harmony Haynes is that—and more. Her articles are both refreshing and convincing; free from the garish superficies which coat the articles poured forth by the average interviewer. There is nothing average about Harmony, bless her! To her goes the credit of putting new zest and adding more laurels to your most estimable magazine.

To Miss Haynes and SCREEN SECRETS, I offer my sincere good wishes for continued success!

Yours truly, E. M.

Editor's Note:

Thank you for the kinds words of praise and best wishes you extend to Harmony Haynes and SCREEN SECRETS. We assure you that forthcoming issues of SCREEN SECRETS will bring you many pleasurable articles by this writer.

Scranton, Pa.

My dear Sir:

In reading through your magazine, for the month of September, I was interested in the article by Harry Carr in which he expressed considerable criticism of Ramon Novarro.

Now why does Mr. Carr think his opinion is to be the "last word"? Does he think that the public expects a Peter Pan from a husky body like Novarro's, or a very human portrayal as was his Pagan? Mr. Carr must remember that there is a great big American public that sits nightly and other times at the cinema and is formed nowadays of intelligent people.

Novarro's last picture was liked here very much. It showed more assurance, poise and acting than he has portrayed in any other picture for some time. The Flying Fleet was poor as to Mr. Novarro's part—so different, no pep, boyish and miscast.

I have not read as direct an attack on any player as Mr. Carr gave Mr. Novarro. If any more such articles are written by Mr. Carr, he may find himself "cooked", not Novarro.

Respectfully,

D. B. H.

Editor's Note:

In view of the fact that "The Pagan" is one of the greatest box-office successes ever produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, it appears that Harry Carr's criticism was a wrong guess on his part—something he is very, very seldom guilty of. We appreciate your frank criticism of anything that appears in SCREEN SECRETS—come again.

Elmira, N. Y.

Dear Editor:

I greatly enjoy SCREEN SECRETS Magazine and the Gab Bag letters.

May I add my wish to that of G. H. of Portage, Wisconsin, that we have a picture of Lillian Gish in our favorite magazine? Not one of those plain ones published for some time past, but one of our beautiful Annie Laurie, with her golden curls, her lovely veiled eyes and her darling little pout. She is my favorite star, and Ramon Novarro is her only rival; I never miss a picture made by either.

Sincerely,

G. H. of Elmira.

Editor's Note:

There is a picture of Lillian Gish in this issue, in "So This is Hollywood." Here's a surprise for you: there will soon be a story in SCREEN SECRETS entitled "Ramon Novarro's Dream Girl." Of course, you'll not want to miss THAT!

Masontown, Pa.

Dear Editor:

I'm a movie fan—and how! I've been a movie fan ever since I can remember, have read magazines of all kinds, have seen loads of pictures, but so far I'm not tired of one yet. I love all the stars as they are all beautiful.

To pick out my favorite, I have no other but Clara Bow. She's my weakness and always was, especially now. Clara makes talkies, so she is the hit of our town. Everyone talks about the IT girl. I've seen The Wild Party, with Clara—and boy! they sure did make whoopee in that one.

SCREEN SECRETS for this month sure was what I call a magazine! I have read it over and have looked at all the pictures a couple of times, but I still find something new every time. SCREEN SECRETS sure is the kind of magazine I love and I don't mean maybe, either.

Well, the best bets in pictures, I think, are Clara Bow, Buddy Rogers, Mary Brian, Johnny Mack Brown and Anita Page.

Best wishes to SCREEN SECRETS, my favorite magazine.

Sincerely,

K. H.

Editor's Note:

It is certainly plain that there is no one like Clara Bow in YOUR young life! Tell us how you like her story in this issue. And as for your other favorites—which do you like best of the four you mention?

THE GAB BAG is a department in which readers are invited to express freely their opinions relative to any phase of the motion picture industry. Letters should be limited to 300 words. While fans everywhere are welcomed to use these columns for frank discussion of pictures, players and other matters relating to the screen, views expressed by readers are not necessarily in accordance with the editorial views of Screen Secrets.

Why waste time on old fashioned methods

. . . when you can learn to play at home without a teacher

DON'T let the thought of long years of tiresome practice scare you from learning to play! Don't let the thought of an expensive private teacher keep you from letting your dreams come true! For you—anyone—can easily teach yourself to play—right in your own home, in your spare time, and at only a fraction of what old, slow methods cost!

It's so easy! Just look at that sketch on the side. The note in the first space is always f. The note in the second space is always a. The way to know the notes that come in the four spaces is simply to remember that they spell face.

Now, isn't that simple? You don't have to know one note from another in order to begin. For the U. S. School way explains everything as you go along—both in print and picture—so that, almost before you know it, you are playing real tunes and melodies right from the notes.

You simply can't go wrong. First you are told what to do, then the picture shows you how to do it—then you do it yourself and hear it. No private teacher could make it any clearer.

Easy as A-B-C

No wonder over half a million men and women have learned to play this easy way! For this famous course is based on sound, fundamental musical principles highly simplified. It's not a "trick" or "stunt" method. You learn to play from notes, just as the best musicians do. You learn to pick up any piece of music, read it, and understand it.

No time is wasted on theories. You get all the musical facts. You get the real meaning of musical notation, time, automatic finger control, harmony.

You'll find yourself studying the U. S. School way with a smile. Your own home is your studio. The lessons come to you by mail. They consist of complete printed instructions, diagrams, all the music you need. There are no dry-as-dust exercises to struggle through. Instead, it's just like playing a game—you learn so fast!

No Talent Needed

Forget the old-fashioned idea that you need "talent." Just read the list of instruments in the panel, decide which one you want to play and the U. S. School of Music will do the rest. And remember—no matter which instrument you choose, the cost in each case will average just the same—only a few cents a day.

You'll never regret having learned to play. For those who can entertain with music at parties—who can snap up things with peppy numbers—are always sought after, always sure of a good time! Start now and surprise your friends!

Easy as A–B–C

Easy as A-B-C
Learning music is no longer a difficult task. If you can read the alphabet you can learn to play your favorite instrument in just a few months this delightfully easy new way!

The Most Daring Book Ever Written!

Elinor Glyn, famous author of "Three Weeks" has written an amazing book that should be read by every man and woman —married or single. "The Philosophy of Love" is not a novel —it is a penetrating searchlight fearlessly turned on the most intimate relations of men and women. Read below how you can get this thrilling book at our risk—without advancing a penny.

WILL you marry the man you love, or will you take the one you can get?

If a husband stops loving his wife, or becomes infatuated with another woman, who is to blame —the husband, the wife, or the "other woman?"

Will you win the girl you want, or will Fate select your Mate?

Should a bride tell her husband what happened at seventeen?

Will you be able to hold the love of the one you cherish—or will your marriage end in divorce?

Do you know how to make people like you?

ELINOR GLYN
"The Oracle of Love"

IF you can answer the above questions—if you know all there is to know about winning a woman's heart or holding a man's affections—you don't need "The Philosophy of Love." But if you are in doubt—if you don't know just how to handle your husband, or satisfy your wife, or win the devotion of the one you care for—then you must get this wonderful book. You can't afford to take chances with your happiness.

What Do YOU Know About Love?

DO you know how to win the one you love? Do you know why husbands, with devoted, virtuous wives, often become secret slaves to creatures of another "world"—and how to prevent it? Why do some men antagonize women, finding themselves beating against a stone wall in affairs of love? When is it dangerous to disregard convention? Do you know how to curb a headstrong man, or are you the victim of men's whims? Do you know how to retain a man's affection always? How to attract men? How to make love keep you youthful and fresh? Do you know the things that most irritate a man? Or disgust a woman? Can you tell when a man really loves you—or must you take his word for it? Do you know what you MUST NOT DO unless you want to be a "wall flower" or an "old maid"? Do you know the little things that make women like you? Why do "wonderful lovers" often become thoughtless husbands soon after marriage—and how can the wife prevent it? Do you know how to make marriage a perpetual honeymoon?

In "The Philosophy of Love,"—Elinor Glyn answers these precious questions—and countless others. She places a magnifying glass unflinchingly on the most intimate relations of men and women. No detail, no matter how delicate or avoided by others, is spared. She warns you gravely, she suggests wisely, she explains fully.

We admit that the book is decidedly daring. It had to be. A book of this type, to be of great value, could not mince words. But while Madame Glyn calls a spade a spade —while she deals with strong emotions and passions in her frank, fearless manner—she nevertheless handles her subject so tenderly and sacredly that the book can safely be read by any grown-up man or woman. In fact, anyone over eighteen should be compelled to read "The Philosophy of Love"; for, while ignorance may sometimes be bliss, it is folly of the rankest sort to be ignorant of the problems of love and marriage. As one mother wrote us: "I wish I had read this book when I was a young girl—it would have saved me a lot of misery and suffering."

Certain self-appointed censors may condemn "The Philosophy of Love." Anything of such an unusual character generally is. But Madame Glyn is content to rest her world wide reputation on this book—the greatest masterpiece of love ever attempted!

What Every Man and Woman Should Know

- —how to win the man you love.
- —how to win the girl you want.
- —how to hold your husband's love.
- —how to make people admire you.
- —why men "step out" and leave their wives alone.
- —why many marriages end in despair.
- —how to hold a woman's affection.
- —how to keep a husband home nights.
- —why most women don't know how to make love.
- —things that turn men against you.
- —how to make marriage a perpetual honeymoon.
- —the "danger year" of married life.
- —how to ignite love—how to keep it flaming
- —how to rekindle it if burnt out.
- —how to cope with the "hunting instinct" in men.
- —how to attract people you like.
- —why some men and women are always lovable, regardless of age.
- —how to make love keep you young.
- —must all men be either "dubs" or devils?
- —how to increase your desirability in a man's eye.
- —how to tell if someone really loves you.
- —things that make a woman "cheap" or "common."
- —how to make people do the things you want them to.

YOU'LL NEVER KNOW LIFE

Until You've Read the Greatest of All Forbidden Books!

YOU'LL never know the tremendous force of human passion—you'll never understand life in the raw, stripped of artificial conventions and hypocrisies, until you've feasted on the most thrilling Tales from that greatest of all true-to-life books—the immortal Decameron.

Here in the frankest, most revealing tales of love and intrigue ever written are situations so startling, so true to life, that we feel they might be happening today instead of centuries ago. Written in an age of plain speaking, they show us how real flesh and blood men and women act—the deep secret motives that influence our actions today no less than they did centuries ago.

And now for a short time only you can inspect these great examples of realistic writing—the stories which you have always longed to read—in your own home for five days, without obligation! Read all about this amazing offer, then send for your copy at once.

For centuries the Decameron has thrilled millions—has inspired countless great authors—has been lauded by the most discriminating critics. Rich in fascinating plots, vibrant with all the passions of the race, it has furnished forth plots for the world's great masters of literature—Shakespeare, Chaucer, Keats, Tennyson, Dryden and Longfellow. A large volume would be required to list the writers who have copied or adapted some of the plots. Hardly a great novel, or a poor one, exists, in which the plot is not in part or in whole taken from the Decameron. No one can know literature, can call himself truly sophisticated, truly a master of life in all its infinite variety, until he has drunk from the bottomless loving cup of that genial old Italian, Giovanni Boccaccio.

These Great Writers Have Taken Plots From the Decameron

Shakespeare took parts of The Merchant of Venice, Cymbeline, All's Well That Ends Well and Romeo and Juliet from these stories. Lessing took the plot of Nathan der Weise, Chaucer the idea of his Canterbury Tales, Dryden, Keats, Longfellow and Tennyson wrote poems—all based on these great tales, which have outlived thousands of manuscripts written since their day.

Between the covers of these Tales from the Decameron you will find life itself—real, pulsating passionate life that refuses to be confined by paralyzing restrictions—life that refuses to follow the dictates of prudery. Far from being immoral, as many narrow minded people used to think, these Tales from the Decameron are in reality almost a text book for the earnest student of that greatest of all studies—human nature.

Boccaccio's stories have already lived five times as long as our United States—over twenty-four generations. They were the "best sellers" when gunpowder was scarcely known—and yet today they still delight us, still give us pleasure and instruction, with their immortal vitality, forever young, forever gay, forever thrilling. If you like to read a story of adventure, read one of these. If you want a charming love story, read another. If you look for tragedy, read a third. The fourth will make you weep.

The morals and customs of Italy of the fourteenth century are all laid before you—the way people lived, the hovels and palaces they dwelt in, their methods of travel—all are told with a wit and pathos that never crept between the covers of any book penned by a historian. Thus the stories not only amuse and entertain, which after all is the first requirement of good fiction, but they give us the history of the manners and customs and morals of a long passed age. They constitute a landmark of literature, which must not be passed over, if you would broaden your vision—make yourself truly cultured.

THE EDITOR'S OPINION

¶On Personalities and Pictures

HERE is something that will bear thinking about. Two of the biggest box office hits of recent months are The Pagan and The Single Standard; both of them silent pictures. True, Novarro sings in The Pagan. But the titles are printed. What does it all mean?

It will doubtless cause many people to believe that the public really wants silent pictures, hence the rush to see these two films. Personally, I doubt it. Silent films will probably never quite die, but I believe people are being won over more and more to talkies.

Captain Roscoe Fawcett, Editor

A good silent film nowadays has the same advantage of novelty which brought people in to see The Singing Fool and others of the first big talkies. There is something restful and relaxing about a silent picture now and then, but the talkies have so many advantages that it seems hardly probable that their supremacy will ever be threatened.

Lucky Mr. Boles

IN HOLLYWOOD, like every place else, luck strikes like lightning, without warning. Take the strange case of John Boles. He has become one of the sensations of pictures for the principal reason that he has a fine tenor voice, and the actors in Hollywood who have tenor voices at all can be counted on the fingers of one hand.

Not so many months ago, a tenor voice didn't mean much in the life of a picture actor. At that time John Boles was getting along. He was playing passably important roles capably, but so were lots of other people, so it really didn't mean a great deal. The name of Boles wasn't on everybody's tongue. Then came the talkies and the scramble for tenor voices. John Boles had one.

Now, as fast as he finishes a singing lead for one company, some other studio trundles a car up to the door for him and hustles him off to start rehearsals for them. No sooner had Warner Brothers finished with him in The Desert Song and Song of the West than RKO snatched him for Rio Rito and Hit the Deck. And now Uncle Carl Laemmle, who was smart enough to sign Mr. Boles on the dotted line at a time when the Boles signature wasn't so important, wants him to come back home again and make a picture or two on the Universal lot.

Von and Gloria

NOW that Hollywood has had abundant time to get all the rumors out of its system, I am going to tell the real low-down about the break-up of Von Stroheim and Gloria Swanson. It is an amazing story.

Everything was going serenely with the filming of Queen Kelly. Von and Gloria were standing on the set waiting for the lights to be changed. They were discussing a place to eat luncheon.

Came a messenger boy to the set. "Miss Swanson," he said, "is wanted on the telephone." Gloria walked off the set to answer the telephone. She did not come back. Von Stroheim has never seen her from that moment to this—four or five months.

The picture was stopped at once. Von Stroheim was "closed" by the business office. Something like $900,000 worth of half finished film lies on the shelf, acquiring dust and obscurity.

The Will to Win

IF THERE was ever any little girl who deserves a hand, it's Joan Crawford. Joan has fought her way inch by inch to the position that she holds today not only on the screen, but in the esteem of Hollywood.

Now that she has attained some measure of security, instead of resting on her laurels, she is doing everything she can to gain the advantage of culture and education which she missed in her long, hard struggle for success. With the help and guidance of Doug, Jr., she is reading all of the classics of the ages. They are seen often together at the symphony concerts in the Hollywood Bowl. And between times Joan manages to make her household one of the most attractive in Hollywood. All of the draperies and decoration in the house were made by her own hands. She does the ordering and personally supervises everything herself. And on the screen she is doing better work in every picture.

She and Doug, Jr., promise to be one of the most interesting couples in Hollywood, both on the screen and off.

Dear Old Hokum Days

I THINK you are going to see a return of good old hokum in Hollywood. They have tried to be sophisticated, with very poor results.

Cecil de Mille's Dynamite—his first talkie—was just plain hokum with the dear little child run down by the auto truck, the mine disaster and all the rest of it—including the usual wild party. But it was hokum beautifully done. After all, what is hokum if it is not a situation so essential and fundamental in its dramatic force and strength that it has become a conventionalized design? If you come right down to it, there could be no situation imaginable with more force or appeal than the death of a child under the wheels of an automobile truck.

The boys and girls want to sit on the edges of their seats chewing their finger nails. They want suspense, and suspense has been almost lacking in the recent pictures. I have never seen suspense more skillfully handled than in Dynamite.

De Mille's picture seems to punctuate a fault that is pretty general in the new art of talking pictures. They have lost pace. In some cases, the action seems to consist of two people sitting around talking.

One of the best examples of good technique was seen in one of the first of the talkies—In Old Arizona. In this, the dialogue virtually consisted of a series of little dramatic islands. Each group of dialogue was complete in itself: had a beginning, a climax and an end. Then the action moved swiftly on to another little island.

Luck Breaks for Them

IN REAL life, it sometimes happens that the mountain comes to Mahomet. The life ambition of Ramon Novarro—as everyone knows—was to be an opera singer. The talkies have brought to him the fulfillment of this ambition on a silver platter. More people have heard his charming singing voice already—after the one picture, The Pagan, than would have heard him if he had been singing in opera for fifty years.

Another star who will think of the talkies as a kindly Santa Claus is Will Rogers. He never succeeded in getting a real start in the silent pictures. Will Rogers without his quaint philosophical words, is like an egg without salt.

Not Heroes or Villains

THERE have been three fine screen actors for whom it was difficult to the point of impossibility to find stories. They were Will Rogers, William S. Hart and Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese.

In each case the difficulty was the same. They couldn't be dashing young heroes—swaggering Romeos. The public shrank from thinking of them as villains. All left for them to do was to stand around and beam upon young love as it sprouted near them.

Old Favorites

THE courageous experiment of Marion Davies in shaking the dust off the famous old motion pictures and showing them again in Hollywood met with surprising returns. Although the purpose of the showing was charity, as a cold-blooded business experiment, it was amazing. Blood and Sand, The Four Horsemen, The Birth of a Nation, and many other old stand-bys, jammed the houses.

One of the tragedies of motion pictures has been their short life.

Youth Triumphant

ALL at once such a flood of promising youngsters has been let loose upon Hollywood that it is hard to keep track of them all.

This is the day of supremacy of youth, on the screen as elsewhere. While youngsters like Sue Carol, Nick Stuart, Nancy Carroll, Buddy Rogers and Anita Page continue in places of high popularity, there are a dozen or so new names, brought in by the talkies, who are already jostling them to move over and make room in the hall of fame.

At Fox there are Dixie Lee, Jean Bary, David Rollins and Richard Keene, all of whom won their spurs in Why Leave Home? At Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer there are Dorothy Jordan (who won a leading role over night), Sally Starr, Robert Montgomery, Elliott Nugent and Raymond Hackett. At Pathe, Russell Gleason; at First National, Loretta Young, James Ford, Sally Eilers and Carroll Nye; at Warner Brothers, Armida, Edna Murphy, Audrey Ferris and Grant Withers, and at Paramount, Stanley Smith, Helen Kane and Morgan Farley.

Practically all of them are still at the age where they look upon twenty-five as the brink of senility, when they will be sitting in carpet slippers by the fireside.

This is the age of speed and vitality and the unquenchable energy of youth is at a premium. It's a great day, boys and girls, in which to make good at an early age.

MAURICE CHEVALIER, idol of France, brings his dazzling personality to the American screen for the second time, in The Love Parade, his forthcoming talking picture.

Why the IT Girl

Clara Bow wants marriage—and children—and she finds in Harry Richman all the attributes of an ideal husband. But matrimony and careers don't mix, thinks the IT girl—and she's in no hurry about marrying until she's certain that they're both in love. As told to Ruth Biery

By CLARA BOW

Foreword:

This is the story of Clara Bow's engagement to Harry Richman, exactly as she told it to me, this afternoon, in her dressing room at the Paramount studios. I wish everyone who loves her on the screen could have seen her, today, in person!

She looked eighteen! She talked so rapidly, so impulsively, with big words and little ones tumbling over one another, that my pencil could scarcely keep up with her.

Her skin is as soft as a baby's. It seems impossible that anyone who dashes around in an open car and spends hours on the sands before her Malibu cottage could maintain such a complexion. Perhaps it's because nature does it. She washes her own hair, washes her own face, does her own nails—in other words, she's just Clara as much today as when she lived in the "other end of town" in New Jersey. No one could have described her then; so why should I try it, today? She's—just Clara.

RUTH BIERY.

IT IS a great risk for a man to marry a screen woman and so there shall be no hurry about Harry Richman and I getting married. This time I am really in love; I am going out with no one else but Harry. But I do not want to marry a man if there is a chance I will make him unhappy, so we are going to know each other thoroughly before plunging into

"Harry Richman combines sweetness and adventuresomeness. He reminds me of an overgrown boy," says Clara. "Harry seems to me, today, to be the ideal husband; but I want to test our love, so that neither of us will have regrets if we marry." Cautiously approaching matrimony, the IT girl declares she does not believe in divorce if it can possibly be avoided, and thinks that the time to avoid divorce is before two people are married.

Even in a bridal costume, Clara is dashing, vibrant—still the IT girl. "It might be today or six months from now," retorts Miss Bow, when asked about her wedding; "I'm not rushing into marriage."

Wants to Marry

matrimony. No, I have set no date for the wedding. I have always said I would not have a long engagement, I know. I have said that I would just run away and get married. But I have grown up a little. I realize now that marriage is not really a running-away proposition. I guess I have always realized, for when matrimonial opportunities offered, even though I might have wanted to, I would shrink back. Something inside of me would cry, "Wait! Consider!"

Before, avoiding marriage has been instinctive. This time, I am taking time to consider, think out every angle, know for a certainty that I am right and that my marriage will not smash on the rocks, like so many marriages which have been made in haste and repented at leisure.

I WANT to know thoroughly the man who is to be my husband; know everything about him. I believe that you know a person better through an engagement. I want Harry to know me. I insist that he, too, be certain that he is not infatuated, rather than deeply in love with me.

I do not believe in divorce if it can be avoided and the time to really avoid divorce is before you are married.

I want children. I really wish to have little ones. I am like other women. But I cannot have them and my career at the same time; so I am not rushing into marriage.

I really believe I shall eventually marry Harry Richman. He combines sweetness and adventuresomeness. He reminds me of an over-grown boy.

I have not known Harry for a long time, as all of the papers have printed. I did not run around with him in New York City. I met him once at a big party. We were introduced. Not even his face lingered in my memory. He sent me some kidding telegrams in New York. Tele-

"Of course, I have been interested in other men—all women have love-infatuations," challenges Clara. "But before this, avoiding the bonds of matrimony has always been instinctive with me."

"I want to know thoroughly the man who is to be my husband; know everything about him. I want Harry to know me. I insist that he, too, be certain that he is not infatuated, rather than deeply in love with me," philosophizes Miss Bow. While she says it is really love this time, Clara believes that one can never be too sure in such an important matter.

TALKIES in ¶ Turn the dial of your television cabinet, sit back in your easy chair —and watch the stars of filmdom play for you in your living room! Just around the corner of 1929 such a revelation awaits you!

Here is shown the standard equipment used for broadcasting color television, the "studio" you'll tune in on. The young lady is seated before the color screen, composed of the three primary colors, red, green and blue, which sends out the picture in natural colors.

A GIGANTIC Jinni straddles the motion picture industry today. Its power staggers the imagination. The name of this spectre is Television, and as yet the film moguls do not know whether to fear or to welcome the shadow of its presence.

Television, once released from the puny powers that now hold it in abeyance, could work this miracle:

Project upon a screen in your living room a motion picture in colors, with the music and dialogue accompanying it, with players appearing before you by the magic of three-dimensional lenses exactly as if they were there in flesh and blood!

Television Now Practical

A FEW years ago our radios were haphazard affairs, cumbersome, depending on batteries. Now they are compact, plug in on your lighting system, and offer astonishing refinements over the old sets.

Television is going through the same process today. Already television programs are being broadcast by station W3XK every other night. Thousands of sets are receiving these broadcasts. Tests have proved that movies in colors can be transmitted through space by radio.

When the proper time comes, fifteen million television sets, rented by the month, might put the theater out of business, and transfer its entertainment to the private homes of the movie fans.

Television holds forth no idle threat, for it has the power to revolutionize the movies with so vast an upheaval that the talkie changes would seem like a mere ripple. But the movies need not suffer from such a change; indeed, the time may come when television will prove the saving of the films. Movies were declining in popularity when the talkies arrived to bolster them. Television may be another lifesaver.

Dr. C. Francis Jenkins, television expert, predicts the broadcasting of national events, with sound accompaniment, to home screens. Football games and other sports would add to the home program.

And who would pay for this free entertainment? Advertisers who now spend billions annually in promoting their products through radio, newspapers, and magazines! Sets would be rented you by the manufacturer. The broadcasting company would present its programs from central stations, and such announcements as "Bo-Peep Baking Powder presents tonight a feature film entitled Saintly Sinners," might be heard, while a picture of the baking powder can appears on the screen before you.

Sets Are Like Radio Cabinets

ADVANCEMENT in the apparatus for joining the audible with the visual and hurling them through the air has been rapid in the last few months. Television already is practical, and bulky receiving equipment has been replaced by sets no larger than the present compact radio receivers.

It was only last Christmas that Douglas Fairbanks decided to slip a costly television outfit into Mary Pickford's Yule stocking. He instructed his purchasing agent to look over the various models and select the most efficient.

This sketch shows how the three-color "stories" are fused into one perfect picture. The television disc catches the colors from the three-sided mirror and transmits the resultant color picture to the screen.

Your Own Home

By WALTER A. RASCHICK

But when Doug received the report of his employee, he decided on a piece of jewelry as Mary's Christmas gift.

The smallest television set on the market at the time would have filled an entire room at Pickfair, the Pickford-Fairbanks mansion, and would have required the services of a couple of radio engineers to supervise its operation.

But things have changed. If Doug's thoughts still run in the same direction, Mary can have her eye-equipped radio this Christmas, and it will be of a size and type that she herself can operate.

Simplicity Is Keynote

WHEN television is introduced into the home, says Dr. Jenkins, the televisor and the program that comes in upon it will be as far removed from the crude home sets and miniature movies of the early television sets (of a year ago) as the radio set of today is from the crystal and head-phone set of six years ago.

For some time to come, however, television pictures will lack the smoothness of a perfect photograph.

The whole televisor mechanism is simple in the extreme, the regulating control consisting of a single knob at the bottom of the cabinet. This knob brings the receiver in step with the transmitter and regulates the speed of the motor. It is not necessary that the room be made dark in order to see the moving picture.

Because of a certain line of distance being necessary to gain a correct perspective on the picture, not more than a dozen people can watch the television performance simultaneously.

Almost as simple as the mechanism itself is the method of operation. You snap on the switch and the motor starts in motion. This motor revolves the drum on which the image appears. This receiving motor must be kept revolving at exactly the same number of revolutions a second as the motor in the sending station. It is the principle of perfect synchronization in the talkies all over again.

Dr. Herbert E. Ives, of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, sits before the "peep hole" of the receiving equipment. Looking through this hole, a person can see in perfect color any object transmitted by the broadcasting studio equipped with the color-synchronizing device.

How It's Done

IN ADAPTING the talking film to television broadcasting, visual effects are transmitted in the ordinary television manner by scanning the image at the transmitting end by means of a disc perforated with a spiral series of holes; and at the receiving station, by using a similar disc in conjunction with a Neon lamp, to reconstruct the images.

The sound effects are picked up from the marginal record on the film as is the practice with standard talking pictures, and these sounds are broadcast simultaneously with the film.

Recent developments at television laboratories have made it possible to reproduce scenes with their true color values, instead of reproduction in monochrome—the orange-red of the Neon lamp—as was formerly the only possible method. Thus, the talking moving picture will be enhanced by natural colors besides natural sights and sounds when it comes wafting into your living room, over your own little receiving set, a few months hence.

Third dimension, a process recently made possible through the perfection of a three-dimensional camera, is expected to revolutionize the motion picture business, from the exhibitors' viewpoint. Screens now approximately 24 feet wide and 13 feet high will make way for screen 50 feet wide and 30 feet high. This revolutionary departure from things as they are is scheduled to take its place in the motion picture theaters before the middle of 1930—and by autumn of the same year, it is confidently

SEEING the STARS

John Decker, "The poison pen caricaturist of Hollywood," sees the screen stars as they are—without benefit of make-up—and instead of portraits he paints them "funny pitchers."

By WALTER RAMSEY

HOLLYWOOD was knocked for the well-known loop a few days ago. I mean that part of Hollywood that chanced to walk down Hollywood Boulevard and pause long enough to peer into a photographer's window and see a portrait (perhaps I should say a caricature) of that famous director, James Cruze, behind the bars. The picture was in a large frame and the frame was encased in plain, iron grill work. Under the portrait was a card—JAMES CRUZE IN PRISON FOR DEBT!!

As I said, Hollywood was knocked for a loop. But it sat back calmly and awaited the blow-off that it felt sure would be forthcoming. It came! The next day all the newspapers in the country carried front page stories of the complete facts. The papers also mentioned that Cruze was suing John Decker (the artist who had so brazenly placed him behind the bars) for the sum of two hundred thousand dollars.

Here is James Cruze, ace director, as he sat for John Decker, clever caricaturist, whose paintings have netted him law suits.

Cruze claimed in no uncertain terms that, ". . . the defendant had made a portrait of the plaintiff and had caused the same to be placed on exhibition in a prominent location—which same exhibition had wrongfully held the plaintiff, or caused the plaintiff to be held, in utter ridicule before his friends and associates and the general public at large."

LATER, in an interview with the press, Cruze said, "I intended to have the portrait made for my wife, Betty Compson. But good Lord! If I ever showed her the picture that Decker painted, it'd scare her to death. Mouth like a gargoyle. Face like a frog!"

In answer to all this, Mr. Decker told the press boys, "If Cruze wanted some wishy-washy, sloppy, sentimental portrait of himself, he could have had a photograph taken—or hired a two-bit painter to do it. I gave him a work of creative art. Of course—when he refused to pay me for my work, and failed to accept the picture, it became my property to do with as I wished. I wished to display it as I did. That's all!"

But that ain't all! By reading other and various accounts of the escapades of the same Decker, I found that he was quite universally disliked in the ol' home town. It seems that he had painted other pictures and the subjects had been long and loud in their vocal displeasure. In fact, he had "done" almost every star, producer and luminary in the business and he had yet to receive a "Thank You." He was referred to in many harsh ways. But his accepted title was: "The Poison Pen Caricaturist of Hollywood."

And it wasn't but a few days after the first suit was filed, that a whole army of Hollywood's caricaturized citizens rose up in all their wrath and each commenced a separate action. They were headed by none other than the most caricaturized man in the motion picture industry—Von Stroheim.

There is no way of telling what the results of these suits will be. But there is one very disinterested person in town and that person is John Decker himself!

This is the picture which precipitated a $200,000 suit against Artist Decker, when he displayed it in a Hollywood shop window.

THE suit means nothing to me but a lot of grief," began the rather tall, practical-looking gentleman who was the cause of all the trouble. "I have very little to lose, the reason being that Hollywood is an almost impossible place for a caricaturist to expect to make a living. The motion picture industry as a whole is willing to buy beauty. Millions are spent to attain it. Gauze—lights—soft focus photography and countless other methods are used to bring out the producer's aim. That is why I, who must look behind the face, am not at all welcome in Hollywood.

"The fan public has come to know the picture people as a group of gorgeous women and handsome men. And I do believe that the stars are beginning to believe it themselves! But, as an artist, I can truthfully say that there is very little real, off-screen beauty here. The face that appears on the screen is not in reality that way at all. Perfect beauty is almost impossible to photograph with the motion picture camera—and I might add that a face which is not at all beautiful in every day life may film marvelously. I mean that the camera uses the face with distinct outlines and a certain heaviness or prominence of features to the best advantage.

WHEN I am called in to do a painting I do not see the subjects through a fine gauze or with the aid of high-powered lights. I see them as they are, without benefit of make-up! Invariably they are far from beautiful and since it is the job of the caricaturist to get the innermost character of the person into the picture, you can realize that the finished product is far from gratifying to their ego.

"Even if the picture were exactly what the star wanted, it would never be entirely satisfactory. It is impossible for a portrait painter to please an actress completely. One single pose would never give her absolute contentment. Picture people have become so used to a varied number of poses that the only thing that will please them is a motion picture! I'll never forget the time when I finished the portrait of Rod La Rocque. I called him into the study to see it and he was more than free with his praise. But the happiness which I had received as the result of his commendation was short lived. He called for the butler and asked for his word. The servant, after a hasty and nonchalant survey, expressed the profound opinion that the picture didn't do the mawster justice because the mawster always had a smile on his countenance.

"Then the colored maid was summoned to criticize. She did. But you should have heard the mother! 'Why—I'm surprised. Why, my boy doesn't have those horrid old wrinkles on his manly brow. And those deep lines.' And when at last Vilma Banky came to pass her supreme judgment, the portrait was ready for the junk heap. Of course by this time, Rod thought that the picture was nothing short of deliberate libel.

AND so it goes. If the subject has enough humor about him to see himself as another sees him—his relatives or friends will hasten to change his mind.

"The real trouble is that America—and Hollywood in particular—does not realize what caricaturing means. The artist's task is to put the person's character on his face. To explain:—some person among your crowd is known as a snob. When you look at his face you can tell that he is a snob. Not from his features but from the unseen manifestation of the man's char-

"Mouth like a gargoyle. Face like a frog!" exclaimed James Cruze when he saw John Decker's finished painting, which the director refused to accept as a likeness of himself.

MAKING PLAY While the Sun Shines

¶ Malibu Beach is Hollywood's new fountain of youth, a sun-bathed happy-land where the film stars chase away studio cares with games of glorious kid days.

By BURNS BRADLEY

Everyone does as he or she pleases at Malibu. Virginia Lee Corbin prefers cycling, and early mornings find her speeding along the smooth beach.

Ah, those mud pie days. Plenty of sand, a pail, a shovel—and Dorothy Mackaill is a kid again. That's the magic of Malibu.

WHILE fans in most parts of the world are preparing to don overcoats, earmuffs and overshoes, and are already experiencing the first chill of winter, their favorites of filmdom frolic like children in Southern California's new billion-dollar playground. It is Malibu Beach, located on the warming sands of the Pacific, north of Santa Monica and south of Santa Barbara; where the golden sons and daughters of the cinema cast aside all artificiality and enjoy life close to nature.

They borrow sugar from each other; they hang their washings out on anybody's line; they all use the same telephone; they all trade at one little general merchandise store; and they forget the formality of city life in their mad desire to be just themselves.

Names-in-the-lights are written in lower case at Malibu. Cooper-Hewitts become shining modern Simon Legrees to force them back to the land-of-make-believe and the hustle and bustle of city life.

Between pictures, many of the stars make their homes there—disregarding their Beverly Hills mansions for the simpler, more cozy "shacks", as they call them 'way out at Malibu Beach.

Stars, whose salaries run to five figures a week, forget their ermines and their sables, just to don their simple bathing suits and pajamas and forget the responsibilities of wealth and fame.

'Tis nothing unusual to see in one aggregation, playing tennis or volley ball on the sand, a group whose combined salary for the day would be equivalent to the United States' president's salary for six months! Clara Bow tossing a volley ball to Corinne Griffith, playing on the same team with Ruth Chatterton or Lois Wilson! Names that Uncle Sam's income tax collector respects for their earning capacities! Names that are idolized by screen fans the world over!

THEY cast off all cares—they are just kids again. The shore line itself, at the Malibu colony, is as intriguing as the people who dominate its sands. Malibu rancho, one of the biggest parcels of property in the west, belonged to Mrs. May K. Rindge, a glorious, dominant figure of the sturdy pioneer type that story-books are filled with.

Her holdings, worth millions of dollars, extended for miles, from far inland to the sea, and for years this woman staged a solitary struggle against the invasion of civilization.

The state wanted to run a road through her land, which she had fenced off, to make what promised to be the most picturesque highway of the Pacific Coast, extending from its southernmost point through to the Canadian line.

Majestic palisades backed Mrs. Rindge's stand, for they too, seemed to be sentinels of sentiment that fought the onrushing hordes of settlers who thronged the peaceful shores.

Finally a settlement was reached and the road was opened along the water's edge, but before that happened, there were a number of motion picture celebrities, intrigued by the natural beauty and sheer grandeur of the locale, who had secured leases on the waterfront near the Malibu rancho.

OF COURSE they little realized they would shortly be in the path of civilization's parade, for they paid large sums for their leases. Little patches of ground ran to three figures a year—on ten-year leases—ridiculous figures it was then thought, but worth exorbitant rent, in exchange for privacy.

It was planned at first to build strange, exotic and dirt-cheap shacks out there, but one by one, the builders weakened. Even the most pretentious owner had misgivings as to the respect due the old ocean and immediately invested large sums in dwellings. However, the money involved wasn't the important thing—beauty of the primitive, rebellious type was sought.

Pauline Frederick built a lighthouse. All her life she had wanted one—just a strange, long repressed desire. But when her eyes feasted on the view from her lot at Malibu, she unleashed this passion, and now it stands, an intriguing structure in a group of houses that domicile the world's most famous entertainers.

Early mornings see Miss Frederick's slim figure, in crinkling gingham, billowed against the wind, her gay-colored sweater pulled tight about her hips and her dusky locks straying from the confines of her matching béret, as she waits for Spero, the Greek fisherman, to row up to her door and invite her to go lobster-trapping . . . if it is seasonable.

Perhaps Lois Wilson joins her. Sometimes Lois' mother will go, too, for they are neighbors. Lois has a passion for swimming—her athletic young body encased in a vivid blue sun tan suit, her golden curls rippling down her back and her feet encased in Japanese clogs. Out at six o'clock in the morning! This is Miss Wilson's beauty secret!

FREEDOM of thought, independence of spirit, lack of pretense, formality and worry, but keeping in mind that the other fellow's privacy must be respected, has made this colony one of the most selective and delightfully managed places in the world.

Dorothy Mackaill was one of the first to discover the charm of Malibu. She built a large house there, and when the talkies came, found herself so busy that she couldn't live there, so she sold her property and "Mike" Levee, executive of Paramount, moved in.

Billie Dove, clad in the regulation attire of the colony, joyously strums a uke.

A game at screendom's exclusive playground. At the left are some of the "shacks" where many famous stars reside.

So This is

ONE of these important young actors, just given small rôles, strutted from the set the other day and approached John Gilbert, who was waiting for his scene.

"How would you have played that scene, Gilbert?" asked the important one.

"Under an assumed name," replied Gilbert, quietly.

All Wet

THEY were making a sound picture. The orchestra played Lover Come Back to Me until Clara Bow was in tears. The director called for a red light, but the orchestra kept on playing and spoiled the picture.

The director didn't think much of the idea and told the musicians so in no uncertain language. Clara smiled, "Just a minute, Big Boy. What are you worrying about? They were my tears."

Mammy!

THE property boy was mopping up the stage. Mr. Al Jolson and his director were on that stage. The boy tried to mop around them. Mr. Jolson moved his feet to one side. Soon the mop found its way over to the feet again. Mr. Jolson moved again. A third time the mop was there. In desperation Mr. Jolson cried out: "Stop it, I tell you! You know I can't swim."

His Whisper Registered

RAYMOND GRIFFITH is staging a comeback in Christie Comedies. Although his voice, which was reduced to a whisper through a throat affliction, registers well on the mike, he usually plays the part of a man with a cold. Which brings to mind a story they used to tell about him:

He came late to a party and was introduced to a very beautiful lady, whom he had never met, but whose husband he knew well.

"How do you do," he said in his whispering voice, "where is your husband?"

"You don't need to worry," replied the lady, also in a whisper, "he's clear across the room."

A Fishy Story

BELIEVE it or not, folks, Arthur Lake is an inventor. He concocted the fishy hand shake, now used by Hollywood's younger set. It is done like this:

Arthur meets a friend. He puts out his hand in regulation fashion. The friend, instead of seizing it, thrusts his hand forth until the backs of the two hands touch. Then they shake, up and down. This ended, each places the elbow of his right arm in the left hand and cups his chin in the palm of the right hand. Arthur says:

"How's your uncle?"

"Whose uncle?" asks the friend.

A grand slam! Yes, Raquel Torres has plenty of tricks in her hand to score a slam on Gwen Lee and Joel McCrea in this bridge game. In fact, Raquel has enough tricks to score a grand slam in hearts in any game, whether it be in cards or in the game of love.

Ruth Elder, famous aviatrix and screen player, and Walter Camp, Jr., president of Inspiration Pictures, Inc., who were married recently in New York, enjoy a jaunt on the boardwalk at Atlantic City, New Jersey, where they spent their honeymoon.

Hollywood!

And Arthur replies, "That's good."

That is the fishy hand shake. Foolish, no end, but adolescent young people are that way.

Too Much Competition

WALTER CATLETT, stage cut-up, who has deserted Broadway for Fox Movietone, warns ambitious amateurs not to go to Hollywood hoping to break into the talkies.

He points out that the town is filled with trained real estate agents, who are always rehearsing.

Fashions in Mottoes

ALLAN DWAN, Fox director, has a slogan card on his office wall that somebody wished on him long, long ago. It says: "It can be done."

George Middleton, famous playwright and supervisor of dialogue for Fox, suggested that the sign be revised.

"You'd better get a new motto in these days of talking pictures, Allan," he said. "Make it read 'Accents will happen.'"

Lillian Gish on the "Ile de France", returning from a vacation in Europe. Miss Gish last appeared in "The Wind", a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, after which she enjoyed a lengthy vacation in England and France, observing foreign progress in production.

Dog-gone Lucky

MARY DUNCAN'S fine Sealyham puppy, which answers to the name of Patsy, was the victim of a brutal attack, last week. Patsy was tied for safe-keeping but amused herself by barking at all the other dogs in the neighborhood as they wandered by. A huge police dog decided to take the diminutive Sealyham seriously, and began literally to chew the little thing to death. Its pitiful yelps brought Miss Duncan out of the house, and she succeeded in driving away the intruder.

Do as the Romans Do

WILLIAM POWELL will play the rôle of an Italian in Behind the Make-up, for Paramount.

For three weeks, Bill studied the Italian language with a Paramount stenographer of Italian descent as his teacher.

Putting on Airs

CULVER CITY put one over on Hollywood when it boasted of an aerial speed cop. When Hollywood investigated they found that the boast was true. Stunting over Culver City was considered dangerous so they appointed Major Bob Blair, famous army aviator, to look after the air traffic.

Shake-up at Paramount

GEORGE BANCROFT can use strong language when he is with men, but when ladies are present he is very mild in his speech and expects the same of other men.

During the making of his last picture, one of the assistants felt that only by swearing could he get any work out of his people. Bancroft walked over to him and said quietly, "I wouldn't do that, Buddy. There are ladies present."

"Oh, what the hell—" but he got no farther. He was too small for Bancroft to hit so he just closed his hands around the assistant's throat and lifted him up and shook him. Then George placed him on his feet and walked quietly away.

Taking Her Role Seriously

DORIS HILL is working in a picture called Darkened Rooms. The scene was going along nicely when she forgot her lines and substituted something just as good.

The director said, "No, Doris, we'll have to retake it. You went up on your lines."

"Oh, that's all right," said the innocent Doris, "I'm supposed to be hysterical."

The Touchy Talkies

DID you ever hear of a felt lined anchor chain in navigation circles? The talkers coined the new phrase. During work on The Ship From Shanghai it was necessary to lower an anchor. The vibration of the chain was so severe as to blow out light valves. So the chain had to be encased in acoustic felt.

This had nothing to do with a fur lined bathtub or anything, as Cecil B. de Mille is not directing the picture.

Quick-change Clara

LEAVE it to Clara Bow to do the something on the spur of the moment. Not long ago Charles Mack of the team of Moran and Mack gave a Hollywood party. Clara, with Harry Richman, her current sweetheart, started to the party all dolled up. But when she was met at the door she observed Mrs. Mack dressed in a light, fluffy printed silk dress on account of the hot weather.

Clara only lived a half block away so she took Richman by the hand, turned on her heel and went home. When she returned she had on a printed silk dress, too. Nothing like being comfortable, she averred.

Richman also tells this one on Clara Bow. Jimmie Hall, who is playing her lead in her current picture, The Saturday Night Kid, finally persuaded Miss Bow to accept as a gift from him a huge Great Dane dog. Clara thought the dog was a good house dog. Richman thought differently and said it should be kept in the back yard.

The IT girl insisted it be brought in. The dog is a playful fellow and when he spied Clara he leaped at her with joy. Plop! And the actress hit the floor with a thud. Now the dog stays in the back yard—all his 165 pounds.

P. S. The Bow-Richman engagement at press time was still reported "on."

The Big Squeeze

JUST shook hands with Karl Dane," remarked Polly Moran when she showed up on the Road Show set at M-G-M, with her hand bandaged.

Love's Road is Rough

HAROLD LLOYD has his ups and downs just like everybody else. Not long ago the company was out on location with sound apparatus. They were trying to film a love sequence between Lloyd and his leading lady, Barbara Kent. Everything was in readiness. "Interlock," was shouted and the cameras started.

The meadowlarks commenced a chorus. The scene was spoiled. The birds were frightened away. "Interlock," again.

Six army reserve planes soared overhead. Spoiled again.

After a short delay, Lloyd and Miss Kent were ready for the love scene a third time.

The blast of a saxophone was heard. Then a clarinet. Then a piccolo.

The company discovered that it was located near a musical school!

Lloyd ordered everything moved to a more quiet spot and the scene was finally filmed successfully.

A Pagan Remark

RAMON NOVARRO wandered onto the set where William Haines is making Navy Blue. He lingered and lingered and lingered. Finally he was noticed by Clarence Brown, the director. Brown went over to talk to him.

"I want a big laugh," Ramon remarked. "I'm anxiously waiting for Haines to sing his theme song."

Jean Arthur, Lillian Roth and Virginia Bruce open the 1929 football season with a bang. And what a bang thinks Virginia, as she hits Mother Earth.

A Doggy Cast

OUT at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer they're making a two-reeler with an all-dog cast. Ernest Torrence chanced to walk on the set one day and learned for the first time about the dog cast.

"If this keeps up they won't need Equity in Hollywood," he was heard to remark.

Who am I?

PICTURES have put Frank Fay, noted New York stage actor, in a whirl. Over at Warner Brothers in Song of the West, he played the rôle of a caballero and had to have his hair dyed black and grow a mustache. Immediately on finishing in this picture, Fay dashed to a beauty parlor, to change his black hair back to red, shave off his mustache so he could appear as a master of ceremonies in the Show of Shows.

"This is SOME business," he said. "I never know from one minute to the other who I am."

Six-a-Day Diet

CHARLES "BUDDY" ROGERS, the youthful Paramount star, has decided the talking pictures have it all over the stage. Buddy was hurriedly dispatched to Chicago to make personal appearances to stimulate business. He made six appearances on the stage every day for two weeks. When poor Buddy got home he discovered he had lost twenty pounds.

Fresh "Peanuts"

WHEN they shout "peanuts" at the First National-Vitaphone Studios nobody turns around to look for a peanut vender. For Marion Byron, pretty young singer and dancer, carries that monicker as a nickname. She got it by sassing a dancing director. "You're so fresh you ought to be roasted," the dancing director shouted at her. Somebody hollered "peanuts" and now it's "Peanuts" Byron.

Whiteman Warms Up

PAUL WHITEMAN has moved in at Universal City, and is one of the main attractions to visitors while the story department is frantically busy manufacturing a script that will serve for his histrionic as well as his musical talents. A special sound-proof bungalow has been built for him, furnished in modernistic design. Not far away is the lodge for his melodious lads. They all drive new Ford roadsters bearing a caricature of the King of Jazz on the rear tire cover.

Every Tuesday at five, Paul and his boys broadcast from a sound-proof projection room over the Columbia network. It is a show worth seeing. Packed in the little room which the California sun has transformed to the temperature of a Turkish bath, the boys work away in their shirtsleeves and suspenders, shirts open at the collar, handkerchiefs tucked in their necks, snatching cigarettes between tunes, while over them all, bland, smiling, impassive under the heat, Paul wields the baton in unceasing rhythm.

Hot pajamas, aren't they pretty? Petite Janet Gaynor wears the very latest in bed-side attire. Some sleep-ins, say you; some Janet, say we. By the way, Janet's latest starring role is in the Fox feature, "Sunny Side Up."

Whiteman is immaculate in white trousers and purple shirt as he starts. As he goes on he pulls out a big handkerchief and mops his brow. Presently another handkerchief. He throws them aside. Waving the baton with one hand he reaches in a hip pocket for the biggest cigarette case in captivity. Big enough to hold a carton. An attendant lights it for him. He uses up another handkerchief. His collar has wilted now. The purple shirt sticks to him like fly paper. But he is going stronger than ever. Now the handkerchiefs are gone. A page comes running in with two bath towels. He uses first one, then the other, hanging them over his shoulder as he goes on. And so for an hour.

Sitting in rockers, fanning themselves, people are listening, from New York to Montana.

Four musical misses—not meaning, of course, that these beauties would let any notes stray. Victor Schertzinger, noted musical composer and screen director, lends an ear to the harmonies of Helene Friend, Josephine Hall, Virginia Bruce and Rosalind Charles, all in "The Love Parade", starring Maurice Chevalier.

Colored Scotch

ONE of the hardest actors on the Fox lot to kid is Stepin Fetchit. Another colored performer attempted it recently, confiding to Fetchit that he is part Scotch.

"If they's any Scotch in you, it came out of a bottle," was Stepin's drawling comment, "an' it sho' wasn't impo'ted."

Griffith's Sacred Duty

D. W. GRIFFITH, master director, startled Hollywood the other day by announcing his first all-talking picture is going to be Abraham Lincoln. He made the announcement through Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists.

And This is Paris!

¶ A department devoted to news of the American film colony sojourning in Gay Paree.

By Comtesse de Chilly-Runford

PARIS, FRANCE.

ADOLPHE MENJOU (an American of Basque origin, though I used to think him French) arrived with Kathryn Carver and a large grouch at the Hotel Majestic.

His coming kicked up a puddle of dust among French stars already a little nervous over the talkie situation, for Adolphe speaks French so well he is a real rival. He has developed a genius for "putting his foot into it," and was in rather a spluttering mood when he reached Europe; even his usually perfect coiffure was ruffled!

"My last picture was not a wash-out," he declared, backing up his statement with laudatory press clippings. "Four large American companies," he admitted modestly, "are fighting each other to get the rights to my films."

After one blare of trumpets announced he was engaged by Pathé-Cinema, another blare blazoned the news that he, like Pola Negri, had assembled his own company in England and would produce two films, one to be ready in October, the other in January.

It was all a little excessive for Kathryn, his wife, who was taken ill; but a few days in a hospital fixed her up again.

Mr. Menjou does not hide the fact that his picture, Fashions in Love, is the greatest film ever made!

JOHN GILBERT has been decorating the Mediterranean, swimming with a smile that makes his teeth shine like the headlights of a destroyer. He is a destroyer, too—of hearts!

I was told (but don't vouch for it) by a French director who knows both John Gilbert and Greta Garbo, that that lady, having the world at her feet, would gladly exchange said world for John, but that John, oddly enough, isn't having any! Perhaps if she would polish up her accent—!

The Paris press indicates this sad division by picturing Greta in a front page left-hand corner, John in the right-hand corner, with the split caption: "Greta in the arms of the Pacific . . . . while John is in the arms of the Mediterranean."

Adolphe Menjou and his wife, Kathryn Carver, arrive in Paris. The noted sophisticate of the screen is expected to put French talkies on the map, since he speaks French and possesses valuable cinematic experience.

HOPE HAMPTON, versatile American star of screen, stage and opera, has been a "knockout" in Paris, covering herself with glory at the Opéra Comique (after her first "tremblements" from stage-fright) both as Manon and as Mimi in La Boheme.

Speaking of knockouts, she gave one to the professional boxer aboard ship on her way over! Such good exercise, you know, for the diaphragm and the singing voice! Hope, who likes to be called simply Mrs. Jules Brulatour, is just back from Deauville and the Riviera. She says: "I sang for the talkies in the first opera ever to be screened with full orchestra." She is beloved in France, her first film having been turned under Léonce Perret ten years ago.

THE Riviera, especially a certain Nice studio, is all a-tiptoe awaiting the promised visit of Adolph Zukor.

Verily, these big ballyhooers (no discourtesy meant!) are gifted at casting their coming shadow before.

Carl Laemmle was "coming" for fully nine weeks before he really appeared—his sailing date actually announced; so that cinema men here were on hot spits to get a word with him, while he was all the time calmly on the other side of the Atlantic. He did show up at last and received an ovation from French and Belgian movie critics at a lunch at the Hotel Meurice, arranged by his director for France, Mr. Stein. Spick-and-span little old Mr. Laemmle, well over sixty, has a great deal of authority of manner in spite of his small stature. Other Paris visitors have included Emile Shauer, director of the foreign department of Paramount, and Melville Shauer, special foreign representative of the same company. Our latest "expectee," due here after a visit to London, is William Fox.

GOSSIP has been doing its darnedest to get Gloria Swanson divorced from her Marquis. However, Cupid has the last word in such matters! He has spoken (with the voice of the Marquis) to announce that La Falaise, to remain near his wife, has surrendered to the screen, and will act in her next picture.

Singing a Carol

Her sparkling personality

By CLIFFORD

Sue can be provocative, pouty, pleading, this minute; aloof, unattainable, even scornful, the next.

Whether it's Sue's love or Nick Stuart's love in the tennis game, this picture makes us sure they're both in love—in the game of life. Hurrah for Dan Cupid!

NO OTHER motion picture actress is more like her screen self, in real life, than Sue Carol.

The same uncontrollable smile that comes and goes, like rays of sunshine darting through floating clouds on a windy day, is one of her most charming qualities off the screen, as well as on.

Sue is a child-woman. She possesses all the naïveté of a ten year old girl; also, all the poise of a woman. She can be provocative, pouty, pleading, this minute; aloof, unattainable, even scornful the next.

She is a barrel of fun on a day's outing or a picnic; she is a most enjoyable companion—but more dignified—for a formal dinner dance at the Mayfair Club, Hollywood's most exclusive gathering place. Clad in a one-piece bathing suit, she can make herself and you at home on the beach; she can be equally interesting in evening gown and ermine wrap at a première.

Perhaps no better description of Sue's personality and beauty can be offered than this: She is just as interesting and attractive at the beach, without make-up or jewels or ermines, as she is at the most formal functions.

Sue is generous to a fault. I have visited scores of Hollywood homes and had my hostess inform me: "Isn't that perfume divine? Sue Carol gave it to me." or "Don't you just love that set of book ends? It is a birthday gift from Sue Carol."

SHE is particularly soft-hearted. She can not bear to see any living creature in pain. Stray dogs, wearing hungry looks, are her failings. Her yard has housed scores of them. She does not take them home merely to feed them and send them away. She takes them home and keeps them. She has had as many as six dogs in her back yard at one time.

Perhaps Sue likes these canine hoboes because she is herself a member of the restless sex. She can not reis aptly described in a as dashing Sue herself.

RANDALL

Like a Black-eyed Susan—delicate, yet hardy; a flower noted for its friendliness, bringing memories of childhood fun—is Sue Carol, a captivating child-woman.

Sue is an atrocious golfer, and only a fair swimmer; yet, clad in a bathing suit, one of her favorite delights is to engage in battle with the incoming ocean tide.

main long in one place. She demands new places to visit, new things to do and new people for association. All her life she has satisfied this inner craving. She has visited Europe four times, and has made so many tours of her own country that even she can not recall them by number.

She is never fully satisfied. If Sue had the world and all on it, she would want the moon. This is no fault, mind you. It is burning ambition combined with her restlessness. She wants to do big things and achieve high honors.

Motion pictures have held her as nothing else before succeeded in doing. She has been two years before the camera. At times, she becomes fretful and mutters a desire to desert Hollywood. But the spell of the grease paint is powerful. Sue can not leave Hollywood because, for the first time in her young life, she has found something that she is having difficulty in conquering; something that is not monotonous to her. The movie thrill today owns Sue, heart and soul.

I have watched her start things, then lose interest before she completes them. At first, she enthuses and her enthusiasm is instantly contagious. It continues only until something causes her to switch to a new project. She does things with fullest enthusiasm or not at all. Pepped up, she can not be stopped. Cooled off, she is uninterested in the subject at hand.

HER wanderlust will never be discharged. There are times, when we are sitting and talking, that she becomes quiet and her eyes take on a far-away look. "I would like to take a long trip," she likely murmurs, "to New York. Or perhaps to Hawaii." That would be wonderful—a visit to Hawaii. But Sue's popularity has

Bonded in Mexico

JUST when Hollywood had shrugged its shoulders and pretended to be indifferent, Nils Asther rocked the film colony with the news of his engagement to Vivian Duncan, of the famous Duncan sisters theatrical team.

Nils and Vivian were engaged once before, but they quarreled. Now, 'tis said, they're going to be wed when they finish their current pictures. Tra la!

Now It Can Be Told

THE secret is out! Lenore Ulric and Sidney Blackmer, her former leading man in a Broadway stage production, were married five months ago.

Blackmer, who is now working at First National studio, has confirmed the report. He said they were married at Miss Ulric's Westchester, New York, estate, by a justice of the peace, with Gilda Gray witnessing the ceremony.

RICHARD "SKEETS" GALLAGHER, famous as a stage and movie comedian, has gone and done it.

He returned to Hollywood recently from a visit to Agua Caliente, with a blushing bride. The lucky little lady is Pauline Mason, stage actress. They are both scheduled to appear in several talking pictures soon.

Gullivers Sever Ties

DOROTHY GULLIVER, Wampas baby star, has announced that she and her husband, C. W. De Vito, have come to the parting of the ways. "But we have parted the best of friends," says Miss Gulliver, "it was just a case of incompatibility."

The couple were married in Los Angeles in 1926, and Dorothy says she is going to forget, and bury her matrimonial difficulties in hard work.

Aerial Proposal

SHARON LYNN admits that she has answered yes. And the lucky man is Clem Clarke, millionaire sportsman from Shreveport, Louisiana. Clarke flew to Hollywood to play a little polo, but it seems that once he met Sharon, all of his well-ordered plans were upset.

They made up their minds 5,000 feet in the air, too. But Sharon says it wasn't the height that made her dizzy, but love. The wedding will take place shortly, they both say. Whoops! But isn't Hollywood letting all of her pretty young stars fall to the wiles of Dan Cupid?

Sally's Engaged Again

ONE of the most attractive couples seen dancing together at the various Hollywood festivities, is Sally Eilers and Harry D'Arrast.

Sally has been reported engaged to most all of the eligible bachelors of the colony, while Harry is considered one of our "best catches" among us girls.

Wedded Twice In One Day

GLADYS WALTON, veteran screen actress, was recently married on terra firma and then went up into the clouds and had the ceremony performed all over again.

After a church ceremony, she and Clifford Parliman, World War aviator, ascended into the skies and there the flier placed on her finger the ring which made her Mrs. Parliman.

Any Old Rags?

¶ Louise Fazenda, the laughmaker, finds giggles in old hats and guffaws in bygone dresses in her perennial quest for a comedy wardrobe.

By LOUISE FAZENDA

The real Louise Fazenda is as chic and charming as she is outlandishly attired and awkward on the motion picture screen.

IT'S NOT the dress, it's the carriage that determines a woman's chic!

And I'm not referring to the elegant old broughams which all our best families used to have, either.

Carriage is a most important element in my work as a comédienne. I can wear an exquisite imported frock and make people double up in laughter. The same people would undoubtedly turn to give an admiring glance if I wore a gingham dress and carried myself well.

Flapping arms. Legs that seem to dangle. An indecisive walk. A pathetic waggle to the head. It is these things that encourage laughter.

I have several methods I follow in acquiring the clothes I wear in my comedy rôles. Sometimes I go to the general store in some little country town where business is not flourishing. Likely as not I will see the store as my husband and I are driving through. I'll say, "Let's stop, Hal. Look at that gorgeous pair of 1915 shoes in the window. And that corset is a dream. And that jabot with the yards and yards of yellowed lace on it—"

In this way I get hats, underwear, stockings, dresses and coats that would cost thousands of dollars if I had them made to order.

MY OTHER clothes source is acquaintances and friends. Sometimes I meet someone who is wearing a dress or coat that I just know would be perfect for a comedy rôle. Before many days I usually have the article in my possession! Of course, one must use tact. I can't go up to a person I have just met and say:

"Oh, what a funny old-fashioned dress you have on. It's just the thing I've been searching for for my new comedy."

All Hollywood hides its heirlooms when Louise approaches. An attic raid at a friend's home netted this antique of fashion which Louise wears in this picture with the late Mack Swain.

I'd probably end up with a nose a little more retroussé than mine already is. And it would serve me right.

Instead, I explain that I think the pattern is ducky and wonder if it would be possible to get one like it. Sometimes, the person is so thrilled at the idea of an actress wearing her clothes, that the article straightway becomes a donation.

I'll never forget an incident concerning a borrowed coat —an heirloom—which I used in a comedy. The woman who owned the coat agreed to let me wear it, and one day came to visit it and me while the picture was being filmed. I guess she wonders to this day why I moved up gingerly to shake hands and then moved away as gingerly.

JAZZ ANTICS

Unromantic Paul

IT SEEMS that Paul Whiteman, about to make his début on the noisy screen, has had a lot of trouble finding a suitable vehicle. (Some unkind critic might suggest that the only vehicle suitable for the expansive Paul would be a Mack truck—but we'll pay no attention to such impertinence.)

Young Carl Laemmle persuaded Paul and his band to star in a picture called The King of Jazz, and so Paul and his followers packed up their instruments (clarinets, trombones, mashies and niblicks) and journeyed to Universal City. When they got there, they found that everything was set for the production of the picture, except for one minor item. No one had thought to provide a story.

So Carl, Jr., unleashed his scenario hounds and told them not to come back to the kennel until they had sniffed out a plot. In less time that it takes to tell it, three of them were back with manuscripts between their teeth.

The three stories were submitted to Paul Whiteman, and he found that in each of them he was called upon to play a romantic rôle and "carry the love interest." Paul objected. He is a husky fellow and able to carry considerable weight—but love interest is more than he can bear.

So Paul and his band remained in Hollywood for weeks, drawing full salary from Universal and playing golf instead of jazz, while the Laemmle hounds were out scouring the country for a loveless plot.

I don't know just how or if the problem has been solved, but it is my guess that when The King of Jazz appears, we shall see and hear Paul Whiteman in the rôle of a widower who has been left a tiny daughter upon whom to lavish his affection. And the tiny daughter will probably grow up and desert her doting father to elope with Rudy Vallee. And Paul will be so upset by this tragedy that he will lose 287 pounds over-night and will then be available for a beautiful romance.

Fixing The Guilt

WHILE the Trader Horn company was on location in Africa, the director, W. S. Van Dyke, discovered that a native race, the Matabeles, were responsible for the invention of the xylophone.

If Mr. Van Dyke will only penetrate farther into the dark continent and discover the race that invented the saxophone, then we'll know just who it is that we're going to fight against in the next war.

Team Work

IN MENTIONING Close Harmony some months ago, I called attention to the marvelous collaboration achieved by its two directors, John Cromwell and Edward Sutherland.

The same pair share the credit for The Dance of Life, which is unquestionably the best of all the talking pictures of backstage life.

Cromwell and Sutherland form a partnership that may easily become the most potent directorial force in Hollywood. They seem to be headed for a masterpiece, if they will only stick together.

Goofy

ALL the wise-guys in the movie industry have been sitting up late trying to explain why it was that the Fox production, The Cockeyed World, turned out to be such an amazing money-maker.

In its first week at the Roxy Theater in New York, The Cockeyed World established an all-time, all-world record by hanging up a gross of $173,391. Nothing like it had ever been heard of in show business. Nothing like it was heard of again—until the next week, when The Cockeyed World beat its own record by $300.

It is my belief that most of these huge sums can be attributed to the title of the picture. In the minds of most people, in this goofy age, the term "cockeyed world" is a perfect description.

The Only Sacred Law

A LOT of righteous folk are continually agitating for laws which will make it a crime for motion pictures to include scenes showing violations of the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act. In some states, laws to this effect have been passed and the censors are empowered to cut out all episodes which contain the suggestion that anyone in this nation ever deals with a bootlegger or concocts home brew.

It is still perfectly permissible, however, for characters on the screen to violate any or all of the Ten Commandments.

Primitive Emotion

THERE may be many who will fail to find enough jovial entertainment in King Vidor's Hallelujah, but I don't believe that anyone who sees this extraordinary picture will be able to deny that it contains some of the most powerful acting that the screen has ever known.

At the head of the all-negro cast are Daniel Haynes and Nina Mae McKinney, and between them they generate more emotional force than the average spectator can stand. When these two come together, first in a dance hall and again during a revival meeting, the audience feels acutely the need of shock absorbers.

Whether it's popular or whether it isn't, Hallelujah is a memorable event in the brief history of the movietone.

Reviving The War

THE boys of Hollywood are back in the trenches, and the girls are once more wearing those becoming Red Cross uniforms—and all because an unknown Englishman wrote a play called Journey's End and an equally unknown German wrote a novel called All Quiet on the Western Front.

There will probably be a lot of war pictures this year, bigger and bitterer than ever. Both Journey's End and All Quiet are now being recorded through camera lenses and microphones, and so is The Case of Sergeant Grischa. And there is even a report from Hollywood (an unofficial report) that Hell's Angels is going to be finished before many more years have passed.

Perhaps Hell's Angels will prove to be the war picture to end war pictures.

Collegiate

AUTUMN is with us, bringing its usual quota of dead leaves, débutantes and collegiate movies. Ever since Harold Lloyd issued The Freshman, the fall season has been poisoned with pictures in which the substitute hero wins the big game and the fair co-ed in the last minute of play.

This year the situation is worse, what with the addition of sound. We can HEAR the youthful ukuleles, the aged wise-cracks and the phony Rahs.

There have already been several undergraduate talkies —including College Life, College Love, College Coquette and The Sophomore—and there will undoubtedly be many more before Thanksgiving puts an end to the football season.

If they keep on long enough making collegiate films, they may some day manage to discover a new plot. But perhaps that's too much to hope.

Detective Fiction

THERE used to be a time when all the heroes of movie plots were either rising young district attorneys or Royal Northwest Mounted Policemen. Now most of them are private detectives.

We have seen and heard Philo Vance, impersonated by William Powell, in two different murder mysteries. We are about to see him in a third, impersonated this time by Basil Rathbone.

The return of that ageless genius, Sherlock Holmes, has been effected, with Clive Brook making the master look younger and less hawklike than ever.

There have been dozens of less celebrated detectives on the screen in recent months, and all the literary criminologists are now busy inventing others.

Speaking as one who has not forgotten his youth, and the paper-bound thrillers that used to be smuggled into school under the wide covers of geography books, I should like to make a plea for the resurrection of those unforgotten heroes, The Old Sleuth, Old King Brady and Young King Brady.

When those glorious dime-novel detectives went after criminals, they wasted no time on discussions of scientific formulae or aesthetic tendencies. They knew practically nothing of psychology. Their sole object was to make an arrest—and, by heaven, they made it!

Keep Moving

JUST when the overworked Police Department in New York imagined that it had solved the traffic problem in the congested Times Square theatrical district, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer had to go and install its famous living electric sign, with a group of near-nude chorus girls kicking and prancing all over the big letters that spell out Hollywood Revue.

So the Broadway hicks were given another excuse for stopping and gaping and exclaiming, "What won't they think up next?"

There are so many free shows along Broadway these days that it's no wonder people don't feel inclined to pay good money to go to the theater.

The Silent

An Engrossing Story of Fiercely Conflicting Desires, in an Amazing New Hollywood, Crazed by the Talkies.

By

HALE HORTON

Wanda, lounging languidly in a studio chair, was watching Merna with amused contempt; but Denton's face was shaded apprehensively. He suspected Merna of being at an emotional crisis that she would be unable to endure much longer. Her face was strained, drawn.

UNCLE" SOL GOTSLIEB, president of Premier Pictures, Inc., gave his desk a resounding thwack and stared hopelessly at the imperturbable monocle of Rogers Denton, who had been imported from New York along with Sol's talking picture installation as an expert in tonal vibrations. Denton was in his middle-thirties, suave, dark-haired and faintly bored with Hollywood. It was he that had charge of the monitor room, and hence was the last word as to the star's voices; an authority which raised him slightly above the status of director.

"Ghastly," he reiterated. "Simply ghastly."

"Do you mean to tell me," Sol cried, "that you can't record the voice of a tree-tousand-a-veek star, especially ven she has de glorious shell-like beauty of Vanda Viley?"

"Wanda Wiley," Denton murmured, "has only to open her shell-like mouth, and the mere thought of the ensuing shock causes the recording tubes to quiver and die."

Sol pierced him with a contemptuous glare.

"Do you mean to tell me dot a high priced feller like you can't twiddle dem leedle knobs dot line your glass cage and make her voice sound all nice and pretty?"

I COULD bite the knobs," Denton assured him wearily, "and still get nothing from her foggy larynx but the raucous bark of a seal."

Sol's exasperation gave way to terror.

"But vat'll I do?"

"Fire the lady," said Denton.

"Fire de lady!" Sol moaned, beside himself with an impotent rage. "Fire de lady! Her contract's god fifdy more veeks to run an' she gets tree tousand a veek! I ask you, do I look like a man vat vould trow von hundert an' fifdy tousand dollars avay?"

"No, Sol," Denton admitted, after a polite examination, "I really don't believe that you do."

"Vell, den vat's to be done?"

"Fire the—"

"Stop id! I von't—" The telephone rang. "Hella . . . Vat? . . . Nod now . . . Dot's right, nod now . . . Busy . . . Vat!" For a moment Sol desperately jangled the hook, then with a resigned sigh, he replaced the receiver. "She's comink up," he whispered. "Vanda Viley."

"Ah," Denton murmured, "I'll just step out this side door while you tell her she's a washout as far as talking pictures go . . . and I'm sure, Sol, that her delicate sensibilities will cause her to give up her contract."

"She ain't delicate," sighed Sol. And as Wanda swept into the room, his chubby little hands twitched nervously.

HELLO, Unc! Say, answer me a couple of questions," commanded Miss Wanda Wiley, an eager blonde with large blue eyes and damp lips. "What's the big idea a tryin' to keep me out o' your statue-smeared den, an' what about this baby girl not starrin' in the great epic of golden nighties, naughty mens and passion in the fuselage called for no reason atall, The Flyin' Blonde?"

"Vell, I tell you," Sol explained, looking very much like a poor old man about to leap over a thousand-foot cliff to his death, "de talkink pitchures haff come in for goot an' The Flyink Blonde iss a talkie an' your voice . . . your voice iss a vashout! So . . ." he continued, raising his eyebrows and spreading his hands out on his desk, palms upward, "vy don't you giff oop your condract?"

Wanda advanced across the room and peered scornfully down into his frightened face.

"Listen, Uncle . . . My contract says I'm to star in three pictures this year at three thousand a week. . . Now don't start yelpin' about me not doin' The Flyin'

Blonde just because that ham voice mixer o' yours can't make nothin' out o' my golden chant! Talkies ain't just what the doctor ordered, so—"

"De doctor?"

"Yeah. I'm the doctor, an' right now I got a date with an aviator, so I simply must be awn maw way, don't chaw know—bring on your tonal expert!"

"Aviators," Sol almost sobbed, "must be important!"

"This one happens to be Barry Rowe—an' don' forget he's doin' all the stuntin' in this new opus!"

"I von't. But vat'll I do about you, Vanda?"

"Rent somebody else's vocal chords. Peekaboo!" she added, undulating through the door, "old pal."

AH, THERE, patient!" said Denton, with a bland smile, as he carefully reseated himself across from Sol.

"An' here I spent all dot money for all dot talkink machinery," Sol was mumbling, "an' den Vanda's voice ain't no goot!"

"Why not get a voice double, as she inadvertantly suggested? You can synchronize easily enough."

"Can I?"

"Well," Denton amended, "someone can." And he immediately waved aside the half-dozen photos of forty-dollar-a-week stock actresses that Sol spread over the desk. "Their voices are impossible. Tried them all."

Sol's wrathful "Mine Gott in Himmel!" was interrupted by the entrance of his favorite director, Leslie Brown.

"Say, what are you going to do about Merna Martin?" Brown exclaimed. "She's been under contract for three months, and hasn't even had a screen test."

"Vy hasn't she vorked?"

"Your friend, Abe Zarto, got you to sign her; but he's after the dame and don't want her pushed; she's a good little kid and I'd like to see something done for her."

"Why not give her a test?" Denton suggested, eyeing Sol in mild distaste.

"She's a little beauty!" said Brown. "I left her in the monitor room. Come on, Denton, we'll also test her voice."

DENTON was deeply impressed with Merna's quiet beauty, with her delicately rounded features and her dark luxurious hair. And he was so unusually patient in assisting Merna with her voice test, and he spoke so encouragingly of the probable result, that she left the studio that evening feeling secure in a new friendship and elated at her sudden opportunity for success.

While walking happily along the sidewalk in front of the studio, Merna was forced to stop abruptly, as a sleek, black Mercedes roadster purred out of the studio gate and hesitated at the street intersection. A flush of joy spread over her cheeks as she glanced past Wanda Wiley at the young man behind the wheel.

There was something hawk-like in his tanned, lean face, and yet his unmanageable brown hair softened his restless demeanor into agreeable boyishness. This was Barry Rowe, the man she loved and worshiped from afar, the man the newspapers hailed as, "That young Barry Rowe, who at the age of twenty-two is the first aviator to fly from Los Angeles to Honolulu and back to Los Angeles again—in two non-stop flights!"

Presently, Merna lowered her long lashes—for she wasn't quite sure whether she was going to laugh or cry—walked around the front of the car in blissful confusion, and continued down the sidewalk.

"Who is she?" Barry inquired.

"Just a babe in stock," Wanda answered, coldly. "Oh, yeh, I guess she spends her nights hoofing at Abe Zarto's 'Sow's Ear'—swell dive."

And as Barry murmured, almost inaudibly, "A beautiful child," Wanda reminded him with a forced laugh, that he'd better keep his eyes front as he had lots of blonde star to worry about!

MERNA disappeared around the corner, so Barry turned and looked deep into Wanda's eyes—and the eyes, be it known, were quite efficacious.

Hurrying along for several blocks, Merna eventually turned up Hollywood Boulevard, finally darting down a side street shaded with pepper trees. And after stopping for a moment to smell the wisteria that clung to the porch of her small, white bungalow, she crossed the threshold and found her mother reading in the living room.

"Mother dear!" she exclaimed, "I've finally had a voice and screen test! Isn't that simply won-derful?"

"About time," snapped her mother. "Have you got the money for the sanitarium?"

Merna exhibited a forty-dollar check, representing her week's salary at Premier Pictures, Inc. It was endorsed and ready to be mailed to the Fletcher Sanitarium, at which her younger brother was staying. The fifty dollars a week that she received from the Sow's Ear night club was used to keep her fourteen-year-old brother in school, to support her neurotic mother and pay the rent on the bungalow.

LATER on that evening, Merna was breathlessly telling Abe Zarto of her good fortune and at the same time attempting to change her costume and listen to the teasing music of the Sow's Ear orchestra as it oozed beneath her dressing room door, when she noticed that Zarto seemed not only astonished but downright displeased. Merna peeked at his reflection in her dressing table mirror as she inquired petulantly (for after all, she was barely eighteen), "Don't you think I deserve it?"

"Sure I do, babe. But I told that fool . . ."

"What fool?"

In spite of his bland smile, Zarto's eyes seemed loaded with a subtle danger as he shrugged his shoulders and remarked, "Nothing at all—Don't you suppose I'm glad when my sweetie gets a break?"

And suddenly leaning over, he impressed his synthetic joy with a kiss before Merna could push him away. "Don't, Abe!" she cried.

"You been holding me off for three months!" Roughly, he squeezed her soft arms. "How long do you think I can wait? Till I'm dead and buried? Heh, the grave's a swell private place but I never heard of much love-making going on in one!"

"I'm sorry, Abe," she murmured, with a queer, little twisted smile, "but I'm afraid that I don't love you."

Burying his fingers into the flesh of her arms, Zarto jerked Merna to her feet and fairly devoured her face with his insinuating eyes.

¶ We couldn't tell you before this, but now we'll let you in on a secret. This new contest, we can guarantee, is going to be a genuine wow!

What's the Idea

Burbank—that's the suburb of Hollywood where First National Pictures are made—where the winner of our new contest will meet the stars and see how talking motion pictures are made!

CONFERENCES, flying trips to New York, telegrams shuttling back and forth between the editors of SCREEN SECRETS Magazine and the executives of First National Pictures—what's the big secret?

Now it can be told!

It's a new contest, more exciting than any we've ever set before our readers—a free trip to Hollywood to spend a week meeting the stars, with all expenses paid, as the guest of First National Pictures and SCREEN SECRETS Magazine!

All the plans are now being worked out, and in the December issue, on sale November tenth, full announcement of the contest will be published. Until then we can only give you the idea of it all.

In addition to many attractive prizes in cash and special awards, three of the readers of SCREEN SECRETS are going to win a vacation in the most interesting spot in the world—Hollywood. There the fans will find dreams come true in meeting and lunching and fraternizing with the famous stars, in visiting the studios of First National and seeing how pictures are made; in short, becoming members of the film colony for one glorious week.

Imagine sitting down to an avocado salad opposite Alice White! Think of the thrill of chatting with Dick Barthelmess about his latest picture!

There's nothing a movie fan would like better than to visit Hollywood with a magic password to the intimate circle within the studios. That's what SCREEN SECRETS and First National Pictures are going to give you. Watch for the formal announcement of the new contest in the December issue!

Recognize Alice White? You may dine with her! You may dine with Alice White at First National. You may chat with Billie Dove, Jack Mulhall, Dorothy Mackaill, Marilyn Miller, Richard Barthelmess, Lila Lee and many other screen players at Burbank studio—watch them acting on talkie sets; visit their homes.

An airplane view of First National studios, where the winner will be initiated into the secrets of making movies, and hobnob with the stars!

One Sweet Song

John Boles' life lately has been one long sweet song, but he struck a few sour notes in the days before success came his way and made him a singing movie star.

By HARMONY HAYNES

I WAS of the impression—people in Hollywood do have impressions, you know—that John Boles was kinda ritzy, but I've changed my mind. We do that in Hollywood, too. Practically the first thing he said to me was, "Do you mind if I put my feet on the desk? I can't talk unless I'm comfortable."

I was there to hear him talk, so I said, "Oh, certainly, Mr. Boles, certainly!"

You see it wasn't my desk, and, if it had been, I'm afraid I wouldn't have been able to refuse this handsome young man that luxury. For putting one's feet on a desk is a luxury, and the ease and grace with which he accomplishes the feat makes it an art as well.

After he had slumped down to the proper degree of solid comfort, he lit a cigarette and lazily blew a few smoke rings for me. I watched with interest. I had plenty of fault to find with this Johnny. In the first place no one has a right to everything in the world. He is six feet one in height. Seems that should be enough for one man without having golden brown hair, perfectly arched brows, deep blue eyes, long curling lashes, a Barrymore nose, pearly teeth and a splendid baritone voice. All this and more was running through my mind when he up and said, "Do you mind if I begin at the beginning?"

THE beginning? Why at the beginning?" Heavens, I had no idea what he meant, so far had my mind drifted from my work, and I thought by asking questions aimlessly, bartering for time, I might get my bearings and thus save myself the embarrassment of having to explain that, for the moment, I had forgotten this work-a-day world and was Cinderella being carried off by Prince Charming.

"Oh, folks seem to think

THE Beverly Hills Hotel was the scene of an exquisite wedding when that young southern beauty, Ada Williams, became the bride of William Thomas Ince, son of the late Tom Ince. Rev. Charles Chapman of St. John's Episcopal Church read the marriage lines in the presence of one hundred friends and relatives.

Mrs. John Calvin Williams, II, was matron of honor, Nancy Drexel, maid of honor, and Florence Lake and Helen Bowen, bridesmaids. Tiny Evelyn Mills, wearing flesh-colored satin, made an adorable ring bearer. The young groom's attendants were his brother Thomas Ince, II, William Bakewell and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. Arthur Lake served as best man.

THE lovely garden of the Roxbury Drive home of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Barthelmess was transformed into a veritable night club for a novel dinner dance; a floor was built over the tennis court and small tables placed around the edges with the center space reserved for dancing.

Guests at this gala event included Ethel Barrymore, Marilyn Miller, Gloria Swanson, Katherine Cornell, Elsie Janis, Beatrice Lillie, Fannie Brice, Bebe Daniels, Lois Wilson, Thelma Todd, Ben Lyon, John Colton, John Considine, Jr., Ronald Colman, William Powell, and Messrs. and Mesdames Jascha Heifetz (Florence Vidor), Henry King, Walter Morosco (Corinne Griffith), Jack Warner, Clive Brook, Jesse Lasky, Samuel Goldwyn, Jack Mulhall, John Robertson, George Fitzmaurice Diana Kane), Gregory La Cava, Ralph Forbes (Ruth Chatterton), and John Monk Saunders (Fay Wray).

A BIRTHDAY party for Broadway was the delightful excuse seized by the hospitable Paul Porcasi for a dinner and evening of bridge. Just three years ago that night Broadway opened on the Great White Way for what turned out to be one of the theater's most phenomenal runs. In the original company, among others, were Paul Porcasi, Thomas Jackson, Lee Tracy and Charlie Hines. Now they are all in Hollywood under the sun arcs of the sound stages.

A Pictorial History of Carl Laemmle, Jr.

¶ Picturizing the career of "Uncle Carl" Laemmle's son, the lad whose nursery rhymes were movies and who, at twenty-one years, heads the multimillion-dollar Universal organization.

Carl Laemmle, Jr., at his desk in the administration building at Universal City, from which he directs the destinies of the huge film company his father founded twenty-three years ago.

From infancy, Carl Laemmle, Jr., was intensely interested in motion pictures, and, with his eager questions, was constantly learning the business from his father. Even as a youngster of six years—as the above picture suggests—Junior had the right idea of what a movie should be. Preparing for his present position, Carl has acquired experience in every phase of production.

Always pals, these two, with a fond smile for each other—Junior Laemmle, at eighteen years, already on his way to succeed his father, Carl, Sr., who was never too busy to answer his son's questions. It has been time well spent.

The Tragic Life Story

¶ Mabel Normand was ruling gaily as life stalked Illness and Scandal and

By HARRY

Here is Mabel as she appeared in 1921, in "Molly-O." It was one of the most glittering successes of her long comedy career, made after she had signed with Samuel Goldwyn and gone back again with Sennett. Her Goldwyn pictures had not been very successful. They were just pictures. But with Mack Sennett, Mabel found again the inspiration that touched off the spark of genius.

William Desmond Taylor, the director whose death by murder made Mabel the victim of cruel publicity in an international love episode.

FROM a miserably poor childhood replete with tomboy fights, games of "one ol' cat" and swimming with the gang of Staten Island, Mabel Normand grew into beautiful girlhood. Soon she was sought by artists as a magazine cover subject; then the motion picture studios—in their very infancy, beckoned—and Mabel answered.

Michael Sinnott had worked his way from a pick-and-shovel job to singing in a chorus and to making comedies for the newly born Keystone Comedy Company. David Wark Griffith was just a lean actor begging the old Biograph Company for a chance to direct a picture. Maurice Costello was the big star. The Gish sisters, Mary Pickford, Blanche Sweet and Anita Stewart were just breaking in.

The Keystone Company packed up, left New York and moved out west. From the first, Mabel Normand showed brilliant promise as an actress. By 1916, Keystone comedies were pouring riches into the box office of every theater that showed them. The studio payroll held names of girls and men who afterward became great stars, among them Harold Lloyd, Mal St. Clair, Ramon Novarro, Charlie Chaplin, Phyllis Haver, Gloria Swanson, Louise Fazenda, Marie Prevost, Polly Moran, Wallace Beery, Raymond Hatton, Chester Conklin, Raymond Griffith, Ben Turpin and Mack Swain.

Madcap Mabel was the undisputed queen of this kindergarten of genius and fame.

ONE of the most thundering hits in the history of motion pictures was Tillie's Punctured Romance. Sennett cast it with a great triumvirate —Mabel, Fatty Arbuckle and Charlie Chaplin. It was a record breaker!

The exhibitors yelled for more—and Mabel was launched in Mickey. In this picture, Mabel played opposite Lew Cody—the same Louis Coti who had played her tomboy games in their childhood days together on Staten Island.

I don't imagine that one thought of marriage ever entered their heads during the making of Mickey. All I can remember about them was the way they kidded on the sets. Mabel is the wittiest girl I have ever known and Lew is famous all over the country as a wise-cracker and story teller.

And as in the case of Mabel, so is the case of Lew. Behind their fooling is a wealth of sound "big" reading and genuine brain power. Any one thinking of their courtship, will imagine it as good vaudeville, but I am willing to wager that they talk of books more than anything else.

You could write a book about the making of Mickey. The adventures and mishaps were plenty. It dragged along for a year or more until everybody was disgusted and discouraged with the darn thing.

One little scene comes to my mind that is so characteristically Mabel that I shall have to tell it.

She had a scene with a bull dog. He took his art too seriously and—without meaning to—bit her very badly. There was a terrible commotion. Doctors were arriving with first aid and Mabel was laid out for treatment. Everybody had forgotten the dog. The poor, abashed fellow was covered with mortification. With the most woebegone expression I ever saw in a dog's eyes, he had crawled off into a corner of a set and lay there waiting for heaven to strike him dead for his iniquities.

It was Mabel who saw him. She flung off all the doctors and the nurses and the bandages and ran over to take the dog in her arms. "Look," she cried indignantly, "you have broken his heart." And she proceeded to explain to him that artists frequently fall under the spell of their art and hurt people.

MICKEY was finally finished and, after a long period, released. It proved to be one of the greatest triumphs of the history of motion pictures. It is still known to the trade as "the mortgage lifter." I imagine it is still running somewhere. It brought Mabel an offer from Samuel Goldwyn of a starring job at a salary then unheard of—$3,500 a week. She took the job.

She was riding on the crest of the wave when she left the old Mack Sennett Studio to become a $3,500 a week star with Sam Goldwyn. She went out with the tide. She was never very successful or happy off that funny old Sennett lot.

While she was starring for Goldwyn, it happened that Geraldine Farrar was working in the same studio. Mabel made it her mission in life to see that the illustrious Geraldine did not lose her sense of democracy.

A male opera star was playing in Farrar's picture and they playfully carried their atmosphere with them. They used to sing little impromptu dialogue at each other. As for instance: "Good Morn-ING! how are you this

About three years ago, Mabel tried a timid comeback in pictures, but the old zip was missing—the amazing store of pep displayed in her vibrant girlhood wasn't there. This is how the changed Mabel appeared, in 1926.

Director Taylor's watch charm and other effects, found on his body after the murder, with Mabel's picture inside the locket. Then the gossips started talking!

10-o-o-orn-i-i-ing?" And the tenor would reply from the balcony in front of his dressing room, "V-e-e-ry well, I THANK YOU." Naturally this was too much for Mabel. One day the opera stars were horrified to hear another voice chiming into their duet with an outburst of song not calculated to add to the dignity of either, or the peace and harmony of the situation.

Farrar was naturally nervous about being watched when she acted. She complained to the management that Mabel

Ronald Colman's

Don't believe all you hear about Ronald Colman as a woman hater. He is too sensible—too gallant for that. But try to find the girl who matches his idea of a wife!

HHere is a word picture of the lucky girl Ronald Colman could fall in love with, the fanciful maid who can be found only in the form and features of the beauties of Hollywood. But there is hope for yearning girls who have the attribute Ronald prizes above pulchritude —a sense of humor!

RONALD COLMAN is the most misunderstood, misquoted and maligned man in this whole wide world. For instance—

Miss America, frequently and with emphasis, has referred to him as a woman-hater.

The press of the land has accused him of being partial to blondes.

His friends have said he preferred solitude to the companionship of others.

Hollywood's wagging tongues have had him engaged to four girls in as many months.

Lies! Lies! All of them lies!

Unless the situation is changed, and changed at once, Ronald Colman is going before the bar of the court of public opinion, plant his back firmly against the wall, and open a battle for vindication. He declares he is telling the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth when he says:

He is very, very fond of the ladies.

He prefers brunettes to blondes.

He thoroughly enjoys the association of his fellow beings—when he can pick the company.

He is not engaged to any girl—and will not be until he finds his ideal.

Yes, the secret is out! Ronald Colman is in love with a girl he never has seen. Somewhere, sometime, he will Bessie Love's diminutive figure is Ronald's dream of bodily perfection. The future Mrs. Colman—whoever the lucky girl may be when Ronald decides—will be exactly Bessie's size.

"Louise Brooks' eyes are marvelous. They fascinate me!" says Ronald Colman.

locate her. And when he does you will hear the wedding bells and the Colman fortune and mansion will have a mistress.

THE screen star's dream girl, as he outlined her to me while we chatted over the cocktails in the Colman library, is a composite of several young women famous in the cinema. However, she is not necessarily an actress.

Here is Ronald's own description of his ideal mate:

The unbobbed hair of the texture of that which adorns the head of Vilma Banky, but it is dark rather than light.

The big, brown eyes of Louise Brooks.

Vilma's nose.

Mary Pickford's mouth and smile.

Gloria Swanson's neck and shoulders.

The diminutive body and the figure of Bessie Love.

And has—and this is most important, Mr. Colman says, Constance Talmadge's sense of humor.

There you have the future Mrs. Ronald Colman and the answer to the four slanderous charges that have been hurled at the silver sheet's silent lover.

THE greatest mystery that ever confronted me," Ronald declared, "is how and where this idea that I disliked women originated. Why love is the biggest thing in any man's life and some day I hope to have an opportunity to claim my portion.

"Marriage, of course, is a matter on which both parties must devote a great deal of thought, I know. I have made the trip to the altar once and it was a failure. But there is nothing more wonderful than the companionship of a loving wife. I have attained other things that I have sought. Love, too, will be mine. Maybe tomorrow, maybe next year, but sometime.

"Every man seeks out his ideal with a mental picture of her to guide him in his search. When one is alone a great deal, one finds his thoughts running to the dream girl. I have had plenty of time to study her. As time goes on she changes slightly, but only slightly.

"Perhaps I have been called a woman-hater because I do not rush into matrimony again," the star went on, "but there will be only one more marriage for me and that will be to the most wonderful girl who ever lived—my dream lady."

RONALD believes that Vilma Banky is, photographically speaking, the most beautiful girl in the movies. This despite the fact that he says he prefers brunettes.

"There is a texture to Vilma's hair that I never before have seen. Also, she has the perfect nose.

"Louise Brooks' eyes are marvelous. They are large and dark brown in color. They fascinate me.

"In the mouth and smile of Mary Pickford there is something wistful, something appealing. No one with her smile could be anything but wholesome and charitable and kind. And she has two rows of perfect white teeth.

"Gloria Swanson's neck and shoulders are the most shapely I have ever beheld.

"Only color film can do justice to the delicate shading in the real complexion of Doris Kenyon.

"While I am five feet, nine inches tall, I should want my wife to be about the size of Bessie Love. Bessie's figure is trim and shapely."

Ronald can even tell you the disposition and likes and dislikes of this dream girl of his.

"She has the same broad and quick sense of fun that has made Constance Talmadge the most beloved girl in Hollywood. A wife who knows humor when she meets up with it is sure to make the kind of a wife I want. In importance, I place it at the head of the list of qualifications for my ideal.

"Also, this wife of mine must have a sense of fair

Lily Damita

Piquant Lily Damita needs no Spanish atmosphere to bring out her true vivacity and color. At the Theater Des Capucines, in Paris, Mademoiselle Damita, a graduate of the Opera de Paris ballet at fifteen, outshone the great Mistinguette and succeeded her as the darling of opera-goers and the toast of the boulevards. Today—Paris is no longer the same without her, but Lily merely smiles and says, "In two or three years more, when I am tired of the success, I can turn to love, maybe, and then get married."

from Gay Paree

Edmund Lowe basks in Lily's smile, but Victor McLaglen seems to have the situation well in hand—at least, Lily's headed his way. This picture is from a scene in "The Cockeyed World," the little Mademoiselle from Gay Paree's current talking picture.

The Editor reviews what has gone on before:

A CHILDHOOD of traveling and study—with her mother constantly reminding her that some day she was to be the great artiste—such was the childhood of Lily Damita. At fifteen, she makes her début as a dancer in the ballet of the Opera de Paris. After three years of adventure as a member of a band of strolling players, Lily accepts an offer to dance at the Theater Des Capucines, in Paris. Soon she succeeds in popular favor the great Mistinguette and then follows her friendships with the Prince of Wales and his brother, Prince George. Vienna and Berlin beckon—and in the German capital she meets Prince Louis Ferdinand, a grandson of the Kaiser. Love at first sight for them both, but Lily thinks of her career—and leaves Berlin to forget. Samuel Goldwyn is in Paris and he offers the lure of playing opposite Ronald Colman in American films and Lily accepts.

Now complete her fascinating story.

I NEVER make up my mind about a place until I get to it. So I do not think about America while I am coming over on the boat with Mr. and Mrs. Goldwyn. But I am very much excited all the time, because I am coming to a new place and going to see many new people and new things.

Everyone is lovely to me in New York. They give grand parties for me—Mrs. William Astor Chandler, Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Gimbel, and many others. Then we are ready to start for Hollywood.

It is the longest train ride I ever take in my life. We pass country and country and country. I do not see what they do with so much space. Then at last we arrive at Hollywood.

I have a very good time at Hollywood. Mr. and Mrs. Goldwyn they see that I meet all the people. Right away I meet the people who are to be my friends afterwards. And they are the only people I know in Hollywood. We go to dinners at Charlie Chaplin's house. We go to parties at Marion Davies'. I meet Doug and Mary and Joe Schenck. I have very good time.

Then pretty soon I start to work in The Rescue, and that is not such a good time. We spend weeks and weeks down at the beach working in the boats. The rocking of the boats make me very sick. I find my English is not very good and I have a hard time making people understand me. For the first time I am homesick. I would like to be back in France.

I hear then that Louis Ferdinand have been very sick in Italy. He almost die. It had make him feel worse, my coming to America. That made me feel very badly, too, because I had thought he would get over it soon and everything would be all right. So I have that to worry about, too.

I am feeling very badly when I get message from an old friend that makes things different. Oh, it is so good to hear from an old friend again.

It is a telegram from Prince George of England. He is at Del Monte in Northern California. And he want I should take my car and come right up to a party they are having for him there. I get my car and my chauffeur and I go there right away.

IT IS a beeg party and we have a very good time for several days. When it is time for me to go home I say to the Prince, "Why do you not come down to Hollywood and meet all the people in motion pictures? You would have a very good time."

But Prince George he shake his head. He say, "Oh, no, I cannot. My father, it would make him very angry. He think if I come to Hollywood I would get into mischief and would get a lot of bad publicity which would not be a good thing to do. I am sorry, I would like to, but I cannot come."

So, sorry as I am, I must go back and leave my friend

Getting the

AND OTHER MOVIE GOSSIP OVER

Harry Carr, whose comments appear only in SCREEN SECRETS among fan magazines, has the best motion picture background of anyone writing about the movies today. Mr. Carr conducts a column in "The Los Angeles Times" and has received screen credit for the masterpieces, "Old Ironsides," "The Wedding March" and "The Divine Lady."

WHEN you get the breaks, Hollywood is a tender mother.

Our little friend Lupe came to the burg a year or so ago without an extra pair of shoes. One recent day she paid $47,000 cash for a Spanish-type house in the center of Beverly Hills. Being Lupe, she naturally began tearing the thing to pieces — which will probably cost her many more thousands before she's through.

All Dressed Up

TO THE immense edification of the neighbors, Lupe takes a daily stroll. She wears a dress made up of a yellow skirt, a red top piece and a magenta bando around her tresses. She looks like the Mexican flag moving out.

For companionship, Lupe has two dogs. One is the largest mastiff ever seen in the film colony. She could ride it with comfort at a horse show. The other is a Chihuahua, so tiny it could get lost in a cigarette case.

The Black Crow

ANOTHER Hollywood actor who is getting the breaks is Charley Mack of Two Black Crows fame—Moran and Mack.

As a business man, Mack has thrust John D. Rockfeller back into the amateur class. He has a murderous contract with Paramount which will net him more than $400,000 from his first Black Crow picture. He owns a trunk factory in the Middle West which earns him a young fortune year by year. He cleaned up on a Long Island real estate tract; and is now starting another one in California.

An Actor Colony

ONE day Mack visited Bill Hart at his ranch at Newhall—"La Loma de los Vientes"—the hill of the winds. He came back with a few hundred acres of his own.

On these sightly acres—overlooking the beautiful Santa Clara Valley near Los Angeles—Charley has begun the construction of twenty-one rural houses—English peasant type. He is going to sell them to his friends at cost—"always like a lot of folks around me."

However, there is no prospect that he will be impoverished by his kindness. Since the actors came out that way, the price of real estate has risen from $50 an acre to $1,000. Bread upon the waters! Gosh, I should say so!

Dolores' Future

THE lovely Dolores Del Rio has come back from a long trip to start on another phase of her screen career. I feel that it will be something far better and greater than she has ever done before. Dolores has something given to few other actresses on the screen—distinction. Something about her suggests a thoroughbred race horse, aristocracy and éclat in every line and every turn and gesture she makes.

Gary's Cows

UNLIKE most motion picture cowboys, Gary Cooper's interest in the lowing kine is not entirely academic. Gary owns a big cattle ranch in northern Utah. Quite recently something went hay wire in one of his round-ups and he had to rush off by airplane to show the vaquerros how the job should be done.

Who wouldn't act as pilot for Mary Nolan, Universal's blond vision of loveliness, even though the day were a scorcher and the vehicle only a wheelbarrow?

HARRY CARR'S PRIVATE LINE

Classics

MARION DAVIES, in the interests of war orphans, has revived a series of old screen masterpieces. I happened to miss all of them. But—take them all in all—the two that I would like to have seen would have been Griffith's The Birth of a Nation and Rex Ingram's The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse. They had more to merit remembering than any two pictures I have ever seen.

Why Clara!

HERE is something that just makes my senses reel. Clara Bow was interviewed the other day about her engagement to Harry Richman. "Yes," she said, "I am in love—if there is any such thing as love."

This from the high priestess of IT.

Don't Ask Her

SINCE a fresh young man from Kansas City interviewed Clara and told about her spitting at a fly on the sidewalk, newspaper men have been regarded with dark suspicion by the Paramount publicity department. When the reporters visit her on the set, they are put under bonds not to ask her about her love affairs—or her engagement—or the damage suit brought against her "intended" by a young lady who asserts that Mr. Richman punched her nose or something.

They are right at that. Underneath the jazz, Clara is a nervous, high strung girl whose health has to be guarded carefully. She is the most precious asset of the big producing company.

Doug and Joan

AS MOVIE fans, young Doug and Joan Crawford are certainly gluttons for punishment. I don't believe I have ever been to an opening when they weren't there; and I happen to meet them at about every other picture I see. Doug tells me unblushingly that they go every night.

Joan is a smart, clever girl, and she realizes that she has a rare soul in her keeping. Doug is a boy with the soul of a poet. And as such will always be a child.

Forgotten

THERE are so many people on the screen to whom the great chance came just once; and never came back again.

The lean cadaverous man named Billings who acted the part of Lincoln in the picture of that name never did anything afterward; and has been forgotten. One of the most notable parts in the history of the screen was the scarlet dance hall woman in Griffith's Scarlet Days. I'll wager that those who read this page cannot even remember her name. It was Eugenie Besserer. She is now doing small parts in Hollywood.

Oliver Hardy puts on his conception of the William Tell act, with Stan Laurel praying that Hardy's aim be good.

Dorothy Sebastian charts out the course she will follow on her first pleasure flight after days and nights of hard work in M-G-M's "The Unholy Night." Dot, after gruelling hours of work at the studio, finds joy and relaxation in her airplane.

WELL, folks, step up and meet C. J. Jungbluth, of Washington, Iowa, first prize winner in SCREEN SECRETS' great Cut Puzzle Picture Contest, which ended July 15.

There were thousands of entries—little ones, big ones, plain ones and dressy ones. Elaborateness of preparation was given consideration only when the paramount requirements were carried out—accuracy, neatness and excellence of accompanying biographies—and when two or more entries were equal in all other respects.

Mr. Jungbluth's entry was a large and richly adorned fan, entitled "SCREEN SECRETS' Movie Fan." He had mounted his pictures with extraordinary care and neatness, his identifications were 100 per cent correct and his biographies were perfect in every detail. He wins the prize of $400.

C. J. Jungbluth

NOT far behind, in the opinion of the judges, was the entry submitted by Mrs. L. G. Moyles, of Los Angeles. Her work was mounted on the four aces: hearts, diamonds, clubs and spades, and the excellence of her biographies was the determining factor in awarding her the $200 prize.

Mrs. S. B. Wellington, of Seattle, Washington, was given third prize, $100. Her's was a unique entry of a cane, to which were strung white pennants, on which the puzzles and biographies were neatly mounted.

Mrs. L. G. Moyles

When informed that his name was under consideration by the judges, Mr. Jungbluth replied: "Were I to say that I am overjoyed at being considered a prize winner in this contest, I would not be fully expressing my feelings. I have entered several contests with no success, but I have found the SCREEN SECRETS competition a real joy in solving."

Mrs. Moyles, the second prize winner, gives some of the credit to her husband's occupation, if not to him directly. "I am twenty-four years old," she writes, "and my husband is a theater organist, so perhaps I take more than the usual interest in the screen world."

Mrs. S. B. Wellington

MRS. WELLINGTON, the third prize winner, writes: "A novice in the contest game, this will be the first time at winning—and what a big thrill it is going to be! Our little family is four: Terrylin, our baby girl; my husband (six feet, five inches tall), who captains the sea, patrolling Northern and Sound waters; Grandfather, who sits and rocks, weaving tales of wonder; and I, mistress of a house built high on a cliff overlooking western waters. And into this new little home, which we have just completed, will go my prize money."

"What do you mean, you didn't hear me?" roared the director. I felt awed and humbled under his fire.

Letters of a Movie Extra

Dear Dolly:

HOW would you like to hear from me? Speaking of hearing reminds me of the Sally set. The floor was pretty crowded so me and the dance man I was detailed to glided over to the other side of the stage. Johnny F. looked like a guillotine ready to descend. He called for a cut, then invited us over for a new deal. He said, "I told you not to cross the stage!"

Being somewhat awed and humbled under such fire, I ignored his caustic remark and kept still, but the detail spoke right up like a good soldier, "I'm sorry, Mr. Dillon, but I didn't hear you."

Now that explanation seemed to cover any mistake or apology needed, but you can't please some people.

Johnny F. bellowed, "What do you mean, you didn't hear me?" and followed up in rapid succession, "anyone who says he can't hear John Francis Dillon is either deaf or a liar!"

And was that set hot? Say, I thought that they had moved the whole of Death Valley on the First National lot and then built a stage around it. No one knows how hot it was, because every time they stuck a thermometer in there it blew the top off. It was rather dangerous, too, because there is some sort of fire ordinance that says you can't let it get up above 145 degrees on account of internal combustion. Now, wouldn't five hundred people, trees, lamps, cameras, stages and so on, look nice passing each other up in the clouds?

The girls didn't mind the heat so much. With these modern lower deck gowns, they could keep fairly cool—but the poor boys! Each one of them was asked to bring at least a dozen collars with him, and every time the director called for a take, the wardrobe man called, "Collars on!" Their laundry bills must have nibbled a little off the end of the ducat.

I almost forgot to mention that, after all these years, I got a closeup of Marilyn Miller. She's what one would call a rather striking blonde, but she is much taller than I thought she would be. She is real nice, though, and even when she sprained her toe, she put on bedroom slippers and went right on working. And there were no headlines in the evening paper telling the world she was near death in a local hospital.

ALEXANDER GRAY plays the male lead. That's rather a big name for such a little fellow. He has been out here only a short time and seems to be more interested about his publicity than his voice. He is so thrilled when anyone recognizes him. He'll get over that soon and be dodging the tourists with the rest of Hollywood's celebs.

From the Sally set, I went over on the Billie Dove set. Billie has changed her usual character and in the rôle of a Broadway hostess she is depicting a good little girl in a bad setting rather than a bad little girl in a good setting. A sort of Madonna in a Texas Guinan disguise and it is her duty, in the picture, to look after us little dance girls and see that we don't chisel any bad money out of the poor tired business men. Making Broadway safe for suckers! Isn't that worth a giggle? Now I ask you, would a night club like that actually go over big in little Ol' New York?

Eddie Lowe is working with her and if there is anything to that "laugh and grow fat" expression I'll be on the eighteen-day diet in no time. I think that man has a funny tongue, because he pulls them so fast he just doesn't have time to think of them before he says them.

Dear old J. Farrell MacDonald is there, too. I haven't seen him for over a year, but he hadn't forgotten me. Exceptional memory for Hollywood. He still eats doughnuts and coffee at the corner drugstore, too.

Well, after I finished that set there was a lull in the work and one of the girls invited me to an equity meeting, and I went.

Love,

Francois Fern

P. S. Don't tell Ma about me not working. She might want me to come home and I would like to, too, only I haven't the fare and I don't want her to know that.

THE SCREEN

By EDWARD R. SAMMIS,

WHY LEAVE HOME?

THERE'S something about this picture that you can't quite put your finger on, which makes you feel that you've had a swell evening's entertainment.

It's very funny, but that's not all. It has nifty, tuneful music—and that's not all. Perhaps it's the casting. While there are no outstanding stars, every part seems taken by just the right person. Perhaps it's the combination of these things that gives you that pleasant glow which is harder to get at a picture than hearty laughs.

This was The Cradle Snatchers on the stage and it was funny then, too. Now De Silva, Brown and Henderson have given it song; and Walter Catlett, who plays one of the important rôles, has given it even snappier lines in spots; and Ray Cannon, the director, has given it speed.

It is all about three neglected middle-aged mammas who hire three lads to entertain them while their butter-and-egg papas are out stepping with three young gals. Then they all end up at the same road-house. Imagine that!

Walter Catlett is the comedy hit among the men, while Ilka Chase, Laura Hamilton and Dot Farley are all riots as the three frantic wives The girls, Sue Carol, Dixie Lee and Jean Bary, are all too cute for words; likewise the boys, David Rollins, Richard Keene and Nick Stuart. —Fox.

THE GREAT DIVIDE

THERE are certain situations that people will go to see again and again and get a kick out of every time, no matter how threadbare they may be worn. One of these is to see the proud and pampered daughter of luxury and wealth humbled by a he-man of the wide-open spaces. And that's the charm of The Great Divide, which was one of the popular plays of its day some fifteen years ago.

Dorothy Mackaill is the daughter of wealth who goes west to visit her dead father's mine. Her father's partner falls in love with her, kidnaps her and carries her off to a cabin, where he decides to teach her a few lessons for her own good.

These old plays revived from the age of innocence have a slightly musty tinge that it is hard to remove, but Dorothy Mackaill and Ian Keith, as the hard-boiled lover, manage to bring it pretty well up to date. Myrna Loy, who seems to be fated to play exotic maidens, adds another triumph to her string as the little Mexican girl who complicates matters for Keith just when he thinks he has straightened out his tangled affair with Dorothy. —First National.

IN REVIEW

SCREEN SECRETS REVIEWER

THE VERY IDEA

AT LAST the talkies are beginning to get a sense of humor.

Time was, and has been ever since the screen began to gurgle, that if you wanted to spend a bright evening in the theater you could be sure of running afoul of dying kiddies, broken-hearted song pluggers, and faithless wives, to say nothing of assorted poisonings, arson and mayhem. That's one reason why you'll probably welcome The Very Idea, with resounding cheers. It's one of the funniest talkies produced yet.

The picture was taken from the entertaining stage farce by William Le Baron, and translated into an equally amusing talkie through the deft direction of Frank Craven, who wrote The First Year and other hits. Frank Craven plays the part of a nut on eugenics who convinces a childless couple of his acquaintance who are planning to adopt a child, that they ought to arrange for a perfect baby by picking its parents in advance.

Allen Kearns and Doris Eaton are entertaining as the childless couple; Sally Blane and Hugh Trevor are attractive as the maid and chauffeur. But Frank Craven gets the laughs.—RKO.

THE DRAKE CASE

THE greatest interest for fans in this picture is the fact that it was the last appearance of Gladys Brockwell on the screen before her tragic death as the result of an auto accident, which cut short her triumphant return to the screen after an absence of some years. Her's was the outstanding rôle in the murder mystery as the mother of the heroine, and the principal suspect of the murder. When placed on the witness stand in her own defense, Miss Brockwell's highly creditable work in introducing surprising evidence that leads to the solution of the mystery, furnishes the kind of a gripping dramatic situation one likes to remember.

These murder plays are so much alike that it is hard to remember one from the other. The Drake Case has few points of distinction from the others as far as mechanics are concerned.

Mrs. Drake is murdered as she is about to leave for Europe with her stepdaughter, Barbara Leonard. Lulu Marks, a servant girl, (Gladys Brockwell) is suspected of the murder and placed on trial. She strengthens the case against herself by refusing to talk. The crisis in the development of the story comes when evidence is introduced to show that Lulu Marks is the real mother of Georgia. Evidence quickly takes a new turn until the real murderer is forced into the limelight and mother and daughter are reunited.—Universal.

TWIN BEDS

THIS grand old farce was considered wicked enough to titter at behind a handkerchief in the days when twin beds were a novelty, but since they have been made the subject of almost as many jokes as the two travelling salesmen in the meantime, the farce, revived as a talkie, seems a touch dull.

However, Jack Mulhall and Patsy Ruth Miller manage to inject a sparkle of life into it, and there are some good laughs that provide bright spots.

It seems there was a wife who would have twin beds, and imagine her embarrassment when she woke up one night to find an inebriated actor who had gotten into the wrong apartment, asleep in the other one.—First National.

WOMAN TRAP

YOU'D never recognize Hal Skelly, famous as a clown and a dancing fool in this, his first serious rôle. He is an easy-going, happy-go-lucky detective who suddenly decides that he should be more serious about his work. The deaths of his own brother and the brother of his sweetheart, Evelyn Brent, are the result. From then on things go from bad to worse.

Not exactly one of those cheery pictures that leave you with the feeling that the world is a great place after all; yet it has a certain power.

Hal Skelly does well in his rôle. Chester Morris is touching as the younger brother. Evelyn Brent is sullenly beautiful.—Paramount.

PLEASURE CRAZED

ONE of those society plays that give the lowdown on the uppercrust—all about society people in Santa Barbara, the playground of the world, where people live just too swell. The plot is what you might expect, all about a gang of crooks who plan to loot the society folks, jewel robberies, auto chases, and love.

The cast are all strangers to you, with the exception of Dorothy Burgess and Marguerite Churchill, whom you may have seen once or twice, and Rex Bell, who plays a minor rôle. But that's what you've got to expect in this day of new fame and new faces. This picture has an air to it, though, that will make you like it, and the cast, while somewhat new to you, will please.—Fox.

MASQUERADE

THIS is one of those Louis Joseph Vance stories in which a crook with an eye to the main chance finds he can do himself some good by taking advantage of his resemblance to one of those wealthy clubmen and men-about-town that make such convenient heroes for adventure pictures. And that of course leads to all sorts of complications. There is the girl wrongfully suspected of being a lady burglar who straightens things out by exposing the impostor-burglar at the psychological moment.

This is the first talkie directed by Russell Birdwell, who won attention by making a picture for $500. The cast? There's Leila Hyams and J. Farrell MacDonald and a lot of strange names.—Fox.

SPEEDWAY (Silent)

REMEMBER the old racing classics that Wally Reid used to make in which he always won the prize and then kissed the girl with his face all dirty? Well, here is Bill Haines in one of those, except, of course, that he is Bill Haines, and therefore must be the irresponsible sort who makes good in the end.

It seems that Bill is forced to take the place of an aged friend in a crucial race and then when he has left the rest of the field comfortably behind, he gets out of the car and lets the friend finish the winning lap. It sounds a little difficult, but there it is. Anita Page is Bill's leading lady and a swell team they make for these light romance pictures.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

ONE HYSTERICAL NIGHT

REGINALD DENNY is in good form again. In this talkie he is as funny as he used to be in the good old days when his rollicking mixed-up farces had you rolling off the chairs. It's all very ridiculous in the good old Denny style.

It seems that he is to inherit a fortune, but his sly old meanie relatives lure him to a booby-hatch, garbed as Napoleon, under the impression that he is going to a fancy dress ball. They are hoping that once he gets in he will have the devil's own time getting out again, which he does. And of course he would fall in love with the nurse who is dressed up as the Empress Josephine. Nora Lane, a comely young lady, plays Josephine.—Universal.

PROTECTION

THIS is a rip-snorting story of copy and crime in any given big American city, with racketeers, politicians, and newspapermen giving each other the run around. Of course the hero is the fearless boy reporter who exposes the crooks and wins the girl.

To give even an idea of the plot would take the rest of this department, but it's the sort of a picture where you start drawing diagrams on your cuff to see who is on whose side. It has a ring of authenticity, however, having been written by an experienced newspaperman.

Robert Elliott, who did so well in Broadway, distinguishes himself as the managing editor, and Paul Page and Dorothy Burgess do well by their rôles.—Fox.

COLLEGE DAYS

AND now the college picture epidemic is breaking out again in the talkies. It seems that the temptation to have people sing the good old college songs and bang on banjos, pianos and ukuleles, was too much for the producers to resist. This picture is a little more like college than most of them.

The cast is composed principally of newcomers, notably Sally Starr and Robert Montgomery, which gives the picture a certain dash and go, but it is good old Cliff Edwards singing through the top of his hat to the strumming of his ukulele that pulls the picture through the pinches, although you feel he must have been in college quite a while.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

HOBNOBBING

¶ Intimate gossip of the film capital chronicled by Grace Kingsley, a famous columnist and feature writer whose long experience in Pacific Coast newspaperdom has won her unquestioned authority as a motion picture observer, and whose position as screen critic on The Los Angeles Times enables her to obtain authentic news while it's fresh.

By GRACE KINGSLEY

TAKING movies in South Africa involves a lot of excitement, to judge from the letters of W. S. Van Dyke, who is directing Trader Horn down there in the wilds.

Jungle fever laid its heavy hand on Harry Carey, Edwina Booth and Duncan Renaldo, but all are now better, according to latest advices. Permission from the Uganda health authorities to penetrate the Murchison Falls country, usually barred to whites because of the prevalence of the tsetse fly, cause of the dread sleeping sickness, was granted only on condition that three official physicians accompany the party to enforce precautionary rules.

Harry Carey, Van Dyke reports, nearly lost his life through a practical joke, when he donned a gorilla suit to be used as a decoy for the big animals, and ran into a crowd of natives to scare them. Mutia, head boy of the Zulu hunters, promptly charged the fake gorilla with a pango, or three-foot knife, and it took the combined efforts of director and several technicians to save him.

"We had adventure with the hippopotamuses," relates Van Dyke. "Many of these animals were swimming near the boat in which we were filming the big brutes, when one of them charged. The huge creature dived under the boat, coming up beneath it and very nearly upsetting it. One also must be on constant guard against snakes, poisonous insects and, if near the water, crocodiles."

Speaking of Aviators

JOHNNY MACK BROWN has gone in for aviation enthusiastically. His wife doesn't greatly favor his flying, but he sneaks off every chance he gets and rents an airplane for a spin.

The other morning, early, he went out and hired a plane. The family missed him. Evidently, too, his conscience hurt him a bit. At any rate, his cook shortly caught sight of an airplane. Johnny was in it. He leaned away out, after swooping low, and called out, "I'll be late for breakfast!"

No Treat to Doug and Joan

A MARRIAGE ceremony, even their own, was apparently no treat to young Doug Fairbanks and Joan Crawford!

I was looking at a picture of Doug and Joan in which they were being married in a picture scene. It was one of those elaborate wedding ceremonies such as never was on land or sea.

Then somebody standing by told how it was with Doug and Joan at their own wedding, which took place in New York.

"Doug," the somebody explained, "was wearing an old smoking jacket and smoking a pipe, half an hour before the ceremony, though I believe he did don a business coat afterward; and Joan came to it, wearing sport clothes, and those a little dishevelled. Both had seen so much of made-to-order weddings on the screen that they wanted a little variety at their own."

Norman Kerry Sad Over Separation

WE KNOW for a certainty that Norman Kerry is very sad over his separation from his wife. He dashed over to Europe when he heard that she was going to sue for divorce, and came home with her on the same boat.

Not only is the actor deeply regretful about his wife's proposed action, but he is said to worship his little step-daughter, who has been attending school in Europe. The two are pals whenever they can be together. He it is who taught her to swim and sail a boat and also to ride horseback.

Wheel-of-Fate Note

HOW the wheel of fate does turn 'round, to be sure! Johnny Hines was telling me, as we met on the set where Little Johnny Jones was being filmed, about one trick of the said wheel.

Johnny played the title rôle in Little Johnny Jones when the play was filmed several years ago, you remember.

"Alice Day," said Johnny, "was just an extra in that picture. Now she is playing the feminine lead. Mervyn Leroy was playing the rôle of the jockey. Now he is directing the picture."

Extra Girl Hooks Lunch

A RATHER pathetic instance of the dire distress in which extra players find themselves financially came to light the other day. A star told me about it.

"The extras were having their lunch out of the usual cardboard lunch boxes, furnished by the company," she said. "I watched several of the girls when they didn't know I was looking, and I saw some of them hook boxes of lunch from the big pile of them. They would hide the boxes in the voluminous skirts which they were wearing, and whichever girl wasn't working in a given scene would hide them and keep watch over them.

"I knew one of the girls well, and

A good time was had by all. The smiles of Nick Stuart, Charles Farrell and Richard Keene testify to the fact that the house-warming which opened the new Farrell home was an outstanding success.

With such an inspiring teacher as Joan Crawford, it is only natural that her Boston bulldog should easily learn plenty of new tricks.

JOLTS ON THE

How John Gilbert, Richard Arlen, George O'Brien, Nick Stuart and other stars suffered the bumps along the rocky road to fame and fortune.

By JACK WOOLDRIDGE

AN OLD-TIME vaudeville actor was doing his stuff and it wasn't going so good, so a legend says. His voice had lost its resonance. His jokes were stale. His efforts to be funny went flop. A half inebriated man arose in the audience and with unaccountable aim hurled a ripe tomato which squashed the old artist squarely in the eye.

Sorrowfully and silently he wiped the dripping juice from his cheek and eyed the remnants of the vegetable lying at his feet. Then, slowly, he picked it up and began eating. In a grim jest of humor, he turned to the audience.

"Humiliating!" he said. "But wholesome."

Mervyn LeRoy, the ace of young directors at First National, told the story the other day when recalling his advent into Hollywood and the efforts that he and his buddy, George O'Brien, made to break into pictures. The humiliating but wholesome things they did and the humiliating but wholesome things others have done and are doing, constitute a page of comedy in the log of the good ship Cinema. Most players and directors, of course, must start at the bottom, but that bottom sometimes seems to be somewhere below the sub-basement or in a manhole in a neighboring street. Mervyn LeRoy came to the movies fresh from a vaudeville tour in which he earned $200 a week.

I ASKED for a job in pictures," he said as we lunched in the studio café, "and they put me to work in the wardrobe room. I folded pants and threw camphor balls at moths for the princely salary of $12.50 per-each-seven-days. George was my room-mate. He was an extra and we lived in a hall room on Vine street. All I saw of picture-making was through a high, dark window of the wardrobe room. Many a day I sat there with my face pressed against the window-pane, dreaming. Finally I rebelled.

" 'I want to learn the picture business,' " I protested. 'Please give me a chance!'

"So, I got a promotion. They made me assistant cameraman. All I had to do was carry a camera and about 50 pounds of equipment off and on for 10 to 12 hours a day. I was a sort of lady-in-waiting, companion, nurse and truck horse to that movie machine. For more than a year I toted it, before I realized what they were using me for. Then I quit. I went back to vaudeville."

But young LeRoy had been bitten by the movie bug and before long he was again at the studio gates.

"George and I here want to act in pictures," he said to Al Green, a First National director.

"Want to act, eh?" Green replied. "All right, I'll give you jobs. Come out tomorrow morning. I'll make ghosts of you two fellows."

Which is exactly what he did. For almost a week, Mervyn LeRoy, now a director, and George O'Brien, present Fox star, romped and danced over the Hollywood hills, clad in a nightgown and a sheet!

WE DID our best, too," LeRoy added. "My nightgown got bedraggled and George tore his sheet and stepped on it once or twice. But we positively were splendid ghosts.

"That was our start in pictures. 'Humiliating—but wholesome,' I'll tell the world."

Right after that, the stock of the two began to soar. O'Brien began smashing his way ahead. LeRoy became a director the day he married beautiful Edna Murphy, in December, 1927. He still is in his middle twenties, yet,

ROAD TO FAME

Richard Arlen hurtled into motion pictures via a bad spill on his motorcycle. Here he tells his troubles to the burro which appears with him in the Paramount production, "The Four Feathers", the cinema version of A. E. W. Mason's novel of adventure on the African desert, in which Dick has a featured role.

broadly speaking, he and George began their careers in the sub-basement.

INVESTIGATION shows that an amazing number of stars got their starts in just such humiliating ways. They tell with glee, now, how they suffered through it and how there were times when they wanted to slink away and hide, fearful they would be recognized in their lowly castes.

Take the case of John Gilbert, for instance. John left a theatrical stock company in Spokane, to seek a chance in the Bill Hart pictures made at Inceville. He was a nice looking chap and had little trouble getting on as an extra. They put him in a soldier's uniform, bade him mount a horse and then follow the crowd.

All day he rode in a movie battle with Indians—rode till his body ached and until the saddle left him raw. Then, at sundown, Richman Stanford, the director called: "Everybody back tonight."

Jack's dreams of movie acting rapidly were fading. He knew little about riding and didn't care to know any more. He wanted to act—not ride. That very first night he got his chance.

A SCENE was to be shot at the bottom of a mine-shaft. An explosion had taken place and dead miners were to be found lying in the débris. Kerosene was sprinkled over the wreckage and ignited. Gilbert was among the deceased.

"Nobody is to move!" shouted Director Stanford.

The camera started grinding. The flames hissed and crackled. Jack's shoes began getting hot. And hotter. His feet were blistering. The heat became unbearable. Suddenly he experienced another burning sensation and right in the middle of the act sprang to his feet and started a mad dance amid the blazing timbers. The director was furious.

"What's the matter with you?" he yelled. "Lie down there you blankety-blankety-blank!"

NEW YORK

Gilberts stop enroute to Paree—Foxy Mr. Fox—Thalbergs hurry in and out—Gloria answers a few—Tibbett to warble for Metro—and other bright rays from the white lights along Broadway.

WELL, little bairns and lassies o' fan land, John Gilbert, sometimes known as "the digitalis in the coffee of American womanhood," very much in the company of his loyal little life, Ina Claire Gilbert, swung into New York recently for a three-day stopover on their way to Europe. They had made the trip across the country in 48 hours—via plane and train and termed it swell, not the least bit fatiguing. They were on what might be technically called a honeymoon but which they prefer to call a "holiday," not wishing to attract unnecessary publicity.

But you can't come to New York and be Mr. and Mrs. John Gilbert without kicking up considerable dust. Especially if someone called Greta Garbo is left somewhere in the gloaming, presumably eating away at a broken heart. That is, in a reasonable world you might. But not in New York, filled, as it is, with tabloid newspapers, printed on paper made from dirty old dishrags. Quicker than you could shout "scandal," the slop sisters from the aforesaid dishrags attacked Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert, quietly ensconced at the Ritz, praying for peace from just such interference. The slop sisters snooped around the Ritz until Mr. Gilbert had to consent to see them. Then they descended on him like a ton of brick, hurling embarrassing questions.

To his eternal credit and as a typical example of his general swellness, John answered the soppy dishrag dolls with a nice disregard for their abysmal lack of taste, brains or good manners. He completely disarmed their obvious desire to stir up mud, with simple, straight and direct answers. Had I been Gilbert, I'd have snapped a few spines and thus deprived America of a few Leading Lady Scribblers. Sometimes when I think of the dishrag dolls I can understand Mr. A. B. See's views on the Phrail Sex.

Curiously, I don't know anyone who is so different off the screen than on as John Gilbert. I don't think the men like him, and there seems to be an idea he is Adonis, Paul Swan, Thespis, Edgar Saltus, Zeus and Lydia Pinkham all rolled up into one amongst the women. Anyway, no man should be judged as a movie markets him. Gilbert is essentially human, neither demon nor saint, as men and women generally hold him. He is probably the most intelligent man in pictures today. He is never quite satisfied with what he does. He feels he can do better. He knows the movies can do better. He is waiting for the day when intelligence makes its unwanted presence known in the movie camp.

Be such as it may, the Gilberts left straight for Paris. They intended motoring through the south of France, winding up their trip in London. Then back to Hollywood for what they call, laughingly, hard work. John likes the talkies, but feels he has a lot to learn about them. Ina thinks he knows an awful lot, to judge by his forthcoming talkie, Cock O' the Walk, made over from Molnar's Olympia. She thinks it a peach. In all likelihood she and John won't, as much as they'd like to, appear in the same talkie in the near future. Both are with different companies. But John wants to do a stage play with Ina. By the way, the Gilberts' combined salaries aggregate somewhere around $620,000 a year. Oh, well, look at the income tax they have to pay.

Accident

WILLIAM FOX, the great god brown of the movie industry, which he holds in his back pocket along with about two hundred and twenty-five millions, met with a serious motor accident recently along the Merrick Road in Long Island. He and a friend were on their way to a golf game and a Chrysler ran out of a cross roads and into Mr. Fox's Rolls-Royce. The Fox chauffeur was killed and Mr. Fox pretty badly hurt, needing a blood transfusion to pull him round. After several weeks in the hospital, he is coming round fine at the time of this writing. The blood was given by someone not Jewish, which prompted the irreverent Walter Winchell to remark: "William Fox will never be the same again. He has Christian blood in him now."

They also claim that during the merger meeting at which William Fox purchased the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Company, there were present Louis B. Mayer, Irving Thalberg and Nicholas Schenck, representing the Loew interests. As the deal was completed, Louis B. Mayer is said to have remarked: "Well, that just about finishes us." To which Mr. Fox replied: "Well, what d'ye suppose I paid fifty-five millions for?"

Shearer Nonsense

THE Thalbergs, which means Norma Shearer and Irving Thalberg, the genius who is her husband and boychik Mussolini at the M-G-M factories in Hollywood, snuck into town last week on a three-day business trip, saw two shows and snuck right back to the coast, with no one being any the wiser for it.

Walter Winchell dug this one out about Norma. It theemth that the talkieth defecths of the lithping "eth" have not only proved a curth to theveral tharth of the thcreen but have embarrathed thelebriteth to the point of inthanity.

For instance, at a large cinema première in Hollywood, when several cops were necessary to check the crowd, Norma Shearer had trouble in passing the police. "But I'm Norma Shearer!" she exclaimed hotly.

"Yeah?" was the skeptic retort. "Well, get back. But

THE Marquise de la Falaise de la Coudray, or, if you prefer, Miss Gloria Swanson, floated into this jaded, sweltering old Dutch port recently, and promptly put a lot of spine into things. The heat-suffering city grew cooler, the birds sat in rows on the trees and sang in harmony, old men grew young, folk began to smile toward each other and life began to mean something again. Gloria has just that effect on things. Personally, I hold she has vats of dynamics, magnetism, personality or what you care to call it. She can give Clara Bow cards, spades and It, and make Clara Bow look like a Woolworth salesgirl that's been on her feet all day.

Miss Swanson did a lot of necessary lounging around in swanky, moral pajamas, trying to be pleasant to the parrots of the press, who cluttered up the place asking the same boob sort of questions the Gilberts were swamped with. Only the Swanson type of question was not so embarrassing. They were dumber and mostly about "Do you believe in Love?" or "Are the Boston Americans going to win the World Series?" or "Who will be the next Ambassador to the Court of Hymen?" Miss Swanson, being an intelligent gal—she is to the movies for her sex what Massa Gilbert is for his—kept her head and answered the morons as patiently as she could. Her thoughts must have read like a scene from Strange Interlude. I wish she'd have let fly and plastered a few retorts discourteous to the sloppy sob sisters—and sob brothers, too, in this case. But she didn't, alas.

Here's the up and up on her. She's just finished The Trespasser, a talkie which will have its première in London, where La Swanson will attend as guest of honor. With her will be her husband, the Marquis, whom she hasn't seen for some time, and who is abroad. (No, she and the Marquis haven't phffft).

Annette Harding, one of the cleverest dancing actresses on Broadway, steps gaily along to the tune of popular applause.

Miss Swanson was accompanied by a friend, Miss Virginia Bowker, and her singing coach, Mark Markoff. Singing is no new accomplishment with Gloria. It was her vocal ambition originally that took her to the coast. She sidetracked, however, into the movies. While in New York, Miss Swanson made records of two songs she sings in The Trespasser. One song is Love and the other

Crazy for Blondes

Yes, sir, and ma'am, Arthur is that way about blondes. And here is the big he-man almost ready to fall under the attack of alluring Alice White's provocative eyes.

I AM going to tell a different kind of story about Arthur Lake. Writers and interviewers have been telling the public for years about what a great kid he is, and how ambitious and how good to his mother and kind to dumb animals he is, and all about his abstinence from the use of tobacco or alcohol. I am going to let you folk in on some choice gossip.

For instance, young Lake is daffy about blondes. A blonde will draw his eye quicker than a Broadway chorus girl will fall for a millionaire Santa Claus. No matter if she is long or short, slender or rounded, real or manufactured—just so long as she is a blonde, Arthur will fall for her, even age makes no difference.

There is Dorothy Mackaill, as an example. She is his secret passion. Arthur doesn't even know her; he merely stands and gasps when she happens into his line of vision. Virginia Cherrill, Charlie Chaplin's lovely blonde leading lady, so entranced Arthur that his customary attack of blondiphobia threatened his usual good health.

Yes, sir, and ma'am, Arthur is that way about blondes, bobbed or unbobbed, frizzly-haired, or otherwise.

BELLE'S NEW ROLE

This smiling group of youngsters—only part of the twenty-nine Belle Bennett has adopted—seems to prove her theory that true happiness is attained only through serving others.

Belle Bennett is affectionately referred to as "The Mother of Hollywood." To assuage her grief over the death of her only son, this remarkable woman has adopted twenty-nine children.

By GRACE SIMPSON

BELLE BENNETT, like our friend Chico in the play, Seventh Heaven, is a very remarkable fellow. Only, perhaps, we should say "lady", because Belle Bennett is every inch a lady—according to anyone's measuring tape.

One remarkable thing about her is that she was married when only twelve years old and had a baby when thirteen! And another remarkable thing is that she has legally adopted twenty-nine children!

"I am the daughter of circus folks," confided Belle. "My father was the owner of a large circus and my mother a noted player. She died when I was but a child and my father never got over it—he became both father and mother to me until his death. When I was a very small girl, just before she passed away, my mother called me to her and said: 'Belle, I know you are a nice little actress and some day you will be a great actress, but, dear, never forget to be a great lady first!' I have tried to live up to that," exclaimed Belle, simply.

I WAS born in Minneapolis," she went on, "and when twelve years old, I was married. A year later, at the age of thirteen, I became a mother. By the way, my marriage was the last performed in the state of Minnesota at that age, as the law was then changed.

The thought that I was a wife and a mother made me feel very dignified and grown-up and also happy—but not for long. My marriage turned out most unhappily—as I should have known it would, if I had only been older—and a divorce was the outcome. However, I had my baby to live for, and with him in my arms, I set out to conquer the world. I guess I was lucky, for I soon obtained a part on the stage—small, 'tis true, but it led to bigger rôles—and I stayed behind the footlights for several years. Then

"Angel Belle" her children call her, and they add, "Mother Belle is so beautiful that we all love her."

I went into pictures and managed to get a contract with M-G-M.

Long waits between pictures followed. Then came Stella Dallas, and with some thirty others, I took tests for the part. These didn't come out so good, but Henry King, the director, said he saw some promise in my work and asked me to make a second test.

"While I was putting on my make-up, the shocking news reached me that my son had just been killed in an auto acci-

How I Made a Fortune With a "Fool" Idea

Learn my money-making secret—Be a Real Estate Specialist—Start at home, in your spare time—Use my successful System—Free book shows how.

IT'S a fool idea!"

That's what my friends said, when I told them about my idea for starting a real estate business "on the side."

But with that "fool" idea I made more than one hundred thousand dollars net profit.

No matter who you are, where you are, or what your sex or present occupation, if you want to do what I did—if you want to get out of the $25-a-week crowd and build up a high-class money-making business of your own—right at home—in your spare time—send at once for my free book which opens wide the door of the biggest and best money-making business opportunity you ever heard of in your whole life.

Use My Successful System

When I started in real estate, I tossed overboard all the hit-or-miss, haphazard, rule-of-thumb methods of the past, and put into operation a system of my own which is as superior to the old way as the modern mazda lamp is superior to the tallow candle of our forefathers.

With little education—no experience—no influence—and less than five dollars capital—I started in my spare time and met with instant success.

If you want to follow in my footsteps—if you want to use my amazingly successful system — send for my free book now. It tells how I succeeded—how I have helped other men and women win big success—how you, too, can succeed—how you can have a splendid business of your own and make more money than you ever made before.

A well-known Cartoonist's conception of my idea

A Wonderful Business

Real estate—conducted my way—is a great business. It is as permanent as the earth itself. It is getting bigger and bigger as the country grows. It doesn't require years of study to learn, like most other businesses and professions. It offers enormous earnings to ambitious men and women. Users of my system are making $1,000—$5,000—$10,000 on single deals—as much as the average man gets for months and years of hard work. And the business is practically unlimited. Ten million properties are now on the market for rent, sale or exchange. And you can start with little or no capital—right at home—in your spare time. I did. So did others. So can you. My free book tells you how.

Read These Records

Here are just a few brief extracts from the many letters received from happy users of my money-making real estate system:

"Made $5,500 on first deal after getting your system."—Mrs. Evalynn Balster, Illinois. (Former School Teacher.) "Sold a lot by your methods in less than one hour and my commission was $800."—J. A. Ferguson, Florida. (Former Dry Cleaner.) "Sold over $100,000 worth of property my first year with your methods."—H. D. Van Houten, New Jersey. (Former Grocery Clerk.) "Have sold thousands of dollars worth of property your way. Have deals that will go beyond the $300,000 mark."—Carrie Marshall, Mississippi. (Former Housekeeper.) "My first days work in real estate netted me $435. I recommend your system to anyone wishing to get into a pleasant and profitable business."—F. B. Bennett, California. (Former Traffic Manager.) "Have sold one $5,000 lot and 3 houses so far, with your system."—Mrs. B. H. Morehouse, New York. (Former housewife.)

These are just a few samples of success that you will read about in my free book. Get it. Read it. Follow its instructions. Make big money my way.

Bessie Love

Bessie Love

IT ISN'T often that a girl can mingle with the crowd, live through many ups and downs and remain as sweet, demure and unsophisticated as our own darling Bessie Love.

Bessie was born in Midland, Texas, in 1898, but was reared in Los Angeles. While attending public schools here, she often saw some star pass and for a short while she would dream of being that star. It was not until she was in her senior year at high school that the movie bug bit so hard she couldn't stand it any longer. She ran away and obtained an interview with Mr. Griffith and, much to her surprise, he offered her a contract.

Almost frightened by her own boldness, she begged Mr. Griffith to wait just one week until school was over. That was a full week for Bessie Love. There were examinations, graduation exercises and, far more important, that contract waiting for her. She signed the contract and appeared as a comedy maid in The Flying Torpedo. Although she was a good little comédienne, Griffith saw in her an emotional actress and gave her weepy parts to do.

Bessie is only five feet tall, has blond hair and brown eyes.

Janet Gaynor

Janet Gaynor

JANET GAYNOR was born in Philadelphia, on October 6, 1907. When she was eight years old, the family moved to Chicago, where they remained until Janet finished grade school. Then they again moved, this time to Florida where she attended high school.

She was given her choice between college and a business career and she decided to become a business woman. Her late step-father, whom she called "Jonesy," was not pleased with her decision. He wanted her to go on the stage.

Being a business woman wasn't as pleasant as she had anticipated and she soon grew tired of the confining office work. Then "Jonesy" had his way and the family moved to Hollywood, arriving two days before Christmas, in 1924.

After furnishing atmosphere for a short time, she was given bits. Then comedy leads and later western leads. She applied for the position as O. Henry girl at the Fox studios, but was disappointed. Her disappointment was soon offset by being selected from fifty other girls to play the rôle of Ann Burgher in The Johnstown Flood. This was followed by leads in The Shamrock Handicap, and The Return of Peter Grimm.

William Boyd

William Boyd

THERE is much controversy in Hollywood anent our two William Boyds. Their respective producers wisely keep out of it all, hoping that the two men will settle it between themselves. But it seems to be one of these eternal deadlocks.

Each one has an equal right to the name, by birth and by professional standing. It didn't matter when one was a picture star and the other a stage star, but now that Hollywood claims them both, it is a bit confusing. Nor can one be called William and the other Bill, for friends of each fondly call them both Bill.

William Boyd, the stage star, is the ninth generation to bear that name, his father being William Boyd, noted actor, and his mother, Florence Richman, an equally noted actress. William spoke his first lines on the stage at a very tender age. His mother was appearing in Led Astray. "Oh, God," she moaned, "save my little baby; don't let him die!" It was the one big dramatic moment of the entire play and young William chose that moment to raise up out of the death-bed and say, "Don't cry, Mamma, I'm not going to die."

William Boyd has been signed by United Artists.

William Boyd

William Boyd

THIS is the motion-picture William Boyd. Contrary to the stage William Boyd, whose life practically began on the stage, Pathé's star is a self-made film celebrity. Financial stringency forced him to leave his Tulsa, Oklahoma, high school before graduation. Someone had told him of San Diego, California, and he started in that direction. Upon his arrival at Orange, California, about 100 miles from San Diego, he found he had but 35 cents left.

People seeing this broad-shouldered handsome youth would remark, "You'd screen well." Boyd would grin and go right on working. He had his mind all made up—he would screen well, but a man must live in the meantime and it took several years of work as grocery clerk, automobile salesman and oil driller before he felt he was in a position, financially, to try pictures.

It was hard work breaking into the movies, but after many struggles, he confronted Cecil B. de Mille and announced, "Well, I'm here!" Mr. de Mille was so taken aback with his boldness that he gave him a job as an extra in Why Change Your Wife? That was back in 1919 and since that time Mr. Boyd has climbed steadily upward.

"I GAMBLED 2¢ and WON $35,840 in 2 YEARS"

A Story for Men and Women who are dissatisfied with themselves

THIS is the story of a gamble — a 2c risk — which paid me a profit of $35,840 in two years. I am not, and never was, a gambler by nature; in all probability I never would have taken the chance if more money was involved. So even if you, too, are against gambling, you will feel like risking two cents after you've read my story.

Some people believe I was lucky. Others think I am brilliant. But this sort of luck I had everyone can have. My type of brilliance is that of any average man.

Almost any $40-a-week wage earner has as complete a mental equipment as I had two years ago. And he feels today just about the way I did then. For two years ago, I too, was in the $40-a-week rut. My earnings were $2,080 per year!

I was discontented, unhappy. I was not getting ahead. There didn't seem to be much hope in the future. I wanted to earn more money—a lot more money. I wanted to wear better clothes and have a car, and travel. I wanted to be on a par with people I then looked up to. I wanted to feel equal to them mentally and financially.

But it all seemed hopeless. I was beset with fears. I was afraid of losing my job. I was afraid of the future. I could see nothing ahead for myself and my wife and baby but a hard struggle. I would live and work and die—just one of the millions who slaved their lives away. I was irritable, easily annoyed, discouraged, "sore" at my fate and at the world. I could not think clearly. My mind was in a constant whirl. I was "scatterbrained." I had a thousand half-baked ideas to make more money, but acted on none of them.

The end of each year found me in about the same position as the beginning. The tiny increases in salary, grudgingly given to me, were just about enough to meet the rising costs of living. Rent was higher; clothes cost more; food was more expensive. It was necessary for me to earn more money. So once in a while I got a few dollars more. But it wasn't because of any great change in my ability.

Today I have an income of $20,000 a year. That's exactly $17,920 more than it was two years ago. A difference of $35,840 in two years. My family has everything it needs for its comfort and pleasure. My bank account is growing rapidly. I have my own home in the suburbs. I am respected by my neighbors, and I have won my wife and children's love as only the comforts and pleasures of life can do. When I am old I will not be a millstone around anyone's neck. My children will not have to support me.

I look forward to the future with confidence and without fear. I know that only improvement can come with the years. Once I wandered through life aimlessly, cringing, afraid. Today I have a definite goal and the will to reach it. I know I cannot be beaten. Once my discontent resulted in wishes. Today my slightest discontent results in action. Once I looked forward hopefully to a $5 a week increase in salary. Today I look forward confidently to a $100 a week increase in my earnings.

What magic was it that caused the change in my circumstances? How did I, a $40-a-week clerk, change my whole life so remarkably? I can give you the answer in one word—Pelmanism. I gambled 2c on it. Yet without it, I might have continued in my old $40-a-week rut for the rest of my life.

Pelmanism taught me how to think straight and true. It crystallized my scattered ideas. It focused my aim on one thing. It gave me the will power to carry out my ideas. It dispelled my fears. It improved my memory. It taught me how to concentrate—how to observe keenly. Initiative, resourcefulness, organizing ability, forcefulness were a natural result. I stopped putting things off. Inertia disappeared. Mind-wandering and indecision were things of the past. With new allies on my side and old enemies beaten, there was nothing to hold me back.

I am writing this in appreciation of what Pelmanism did for me. I want other average men to gamble 2c as I did. For the cost of a postage stamp I sent for the booklet about Pelmanism, called "Scientific Mind Training." Reading that free book started me on my climb. I took no risk when I enrolled for the course because of the Institute's guarantee. All I gambled was 2c and I am $36,000 better off now than I would have been had I not written for the book about Pelmanism.

* * * * *

The Pelman Institute will be glad to send a copy of "Scientific Mind Training" to any interested individual. This book is free. It explains Pelmanism. It tells what it does to the mind. It tells what Pelmanism has meant to others. For over 25 years Pelmanism has been helping people to happiness. Over 700,000 others have studied this remarkable science. Among those who have praised it are such great world figures as Judge Ben B. Lindsey, Jerome K. Jerome, Sir Harry Lauder, T. P. O'Connor, Major-Gen. Sir Frederick Maurice, H. R. H. Prince Charles of Sweden, and many others. Your whole life may be altered as a result of reading "Scientific Mind Training." Send the coupon. You have nothing to lose. If Pelmanism does not help you it costs you nothing. There is no obligation in mailing the coupon. No salesman will call on you. The WOMEN who fascinate MEN what is their dangerous power?

THE siren type—the woman who fascinates men at will. One woman in a hundred possesses this dangerous power. She is envied, hated, feared—by other women. And she has always been a mystery. You study her—and are amazed, bewildered. For you can truthfully say "I don't understand what men see in her."
But you want to know the secret—with all your heart. You want the "dangerous power." It is not that you desire to be the siren type. If you could fascinate men at will, you would use your power within reason. Well, then, you may; for at last the secret is known. Lucille Young, the world's foremost beauty expert, will give you the "dangerous power"—give it to you free.

Nature's Greatest Mystery Unveiled
All your unavailing study of fascinating women, your failure to succeed by like methods is easily explained. Nature has never desired a race of women, all fascinating. Her plan is for limited charm. She has said, "I'll give women just enough attraction to marry, and mate." But to a few women she has said, "I'll give the dangerous power of complete fascination."
You know that this is nature's plan—though you may never have thought of it in just this way. Instead you have been puzzled. You have seen fascinating women possessed of no more than average looks—some that you may have considered homely. You have seen women with poor figures outshine women with perfect figures. You have seen women of refinement cast into the shadow by coarser women. You have heard of "sex appeal," yet you know that thousands of women have resorted to physical charms as the main reliance—with inevitable failure.
Strangest of all, you may have known some dangerously fascinating woman as a friend—known that she was willing to give you her secrets. But she could not. For Nature, most cleverly, has made her natural sirens blind to their own methods.

One Woman in All the World Can Tell You
Amazing, perhaps, but—so far as it is known—Lucille Young is the one woman in all the world who knows the complete secret of fascination. A certain amount of beauty is indispensable. This beauty Lucille Young gives you through her methods—admittedly the most effective in the world—used by scores of thousands of women.
But more than beauty is absolutely necessary. Countless beautiful women are not fascinating—hardly attractive—as every woman knows.
So Lucille Young gives you also the very inmost of Nature's secrets of fascination. These secrets have been disclosed by nearly twenty years of study, by gleaning from countless patrons the hidden ways of fascination, by analyzing and putting together. The revelations are startling, mysterious, strange—things you would never discover yourself.
Women are thrilled as never before—because they instantly recognize that all the secrets they have longed to know are revealed—that an amazing new life has been opened up to them. No woman who reads will again fear the siren type. She will meet her on her own ground—be as irresistible as any woman living. And remember, whatever your present appearance, Lucille Young Methods will give the necessary beauty.
Find Out Free of All Cost or Obligation. So marvelous are the promises of complete fascination, that Lucille Young is willing to convince you at her own risk. Simply mail the coupon for her booklet—the most amazing thing you have ever read—and it will be sent free and without the slightest obligation.

Getting Personal

Intimate items about the stars not to be found elsewhere.

Victor McLaglen and one of his seven brothers, who could easily double for Vic if he were a few inches taller, are seen nightly at Henry's, the well-known Hollywood café.

Hoot Gibson was a hostler at the Harry Carey stables before he broke into the movies as a stunt man and trick rider.

Donald Keith, Ramon Novarro and J. Farrell MacDonald all studied for the priesthood before deciding on film careers.

Gus Edwards writes his music in symbols known only to himself and the man who transposes them.

Corinne Griffith has two carved doors in her home which were taken from a palace in Venice.

Ben Lyon

Ben Lyon is the new owner of "Payrus," famous racing whippet. The canine was presented to him by Arthur Rankin, the actor.

Young Doug Fairbanks has been wearing a slave bracelet on his wrist, given him by Joan Crawford. He declared he would never remove it. Then along came a football story in which he played—and he had to break his word!

Paul Whiteman has a porcelain hippopotamus for an ash tray.

Joseph Schildkraut has the largest bed in Hollywood.

Gary Cooper never uses property riding boots when he rides a horse in a picture. He has his own made to order.

Nick Stuart has sixty-three cups which he won in dancing contests; many of them he has won with Sue Carol.

Mal St. Clair has a passion for blue and green shirts of violent hues.

The Gleasons have a bubble boat in their swimming pool made of large rubber balls.

Marian Nixon is a very fine toe dancer, and is also skilled in acrobatic and eccentric steps; while Audrey Ferris has won twenty-seven cups for her ballroom exhibitions.

Marian Nixon

Louise Fazenda maintains a home for her parents adjoining her own Hollywood house. So that she is never out of call, she has installed a set of buzzers between the homes so Mother may summon her when needed.

A film fan has written Rin-Tin-Tin asking for a loan.

Julia Faye wears a beach necklace made out of tiny sponges.

Alice White, who was recently presented with a new Cadillac car by her bosses at First National, drives the car herself, and lets her colored chauffeur and maid ride in the rumble seat.

Neil Hamilton once sold cigars in a Toledo, Ohio, store.

Charles Farrell's new home at Toluca Lake is carried out in typical New England style, with ship's bunks instead of beds.

Pauline Frederick, not to be outdone by Frank Fay and Al Jolson, has purchased a shiny new Ford and she drives it herself.

Anita Page's father doesn't permit her to drive a car. He is afraid she might be injured. That's why Mrs. Pomares, her mother, drives her to and from the studio.

Richard Arlen

Hollywood now has its sockless men in the wake of the fad of bare legs for women. Richard Arlen is credited with having started this new blow at the hosiery manufacturers.

Talkies in Your Own Home

predicted that 1931 models of the home television receiving sets will embody the three-dimensional principle.

THIS is how the three-dimensional effect is produced. Hold up the index finger of each hand, the left hand about eight inches from the face and the right hand about sixteen inches away. Look at the nearest finger and the distant one appears double, and vice versa. Look midway between both fingers and they both appear double.

On this basis the new camera has been developed. An object is photographed from two different points, the lenses of the camera being separated by about four and one-half inches. Each of these lenses transmits a different view of the object, and the shadows, slightly different as a consequence, are perfectly aligned on the same frame of film, thus giving a "double" effect discussed in the index finger experiment, except that the camera result is free from blur and haze.

But that is only the start, according to those who are pouring their millions into the development of aerial optics. They are sincere in their prognostications for startling things in the very near future.

When television broadcasters, however, are ready to offer their patrons a form of entertainment that would compete with the movies, it will be necessary for them to develop their own talent.

New Actor Types In Demand

PERSONS with well defined features will be in demand. Television authorities have described the future radio player as having:

High cheek bones.
A sharp nose.
A clear cut mouth.
Pointed chin.

In all, it is the direct opposite of the face so eagerly sought by film producers. In Hollywood, the well rounded countenance is the one that gets the opportunity within the studios.

Grotesque faces, too, will come into popularity with the arrival of television plays.

Character actors will be at a premium in this new field.

The television players will be forced to use considerable more make-up than do those working for the screen. Up until the present, laboratory experiments have been conducted with black and white grease paints, but now that natural color is being injected into radio pictures, this will give way to paints and powders similar in hue to those used for natural color films, but they will be applied more freely.

The television star will command a salary equal to that of the film favorite, according to those who have made a study of the situation.

Because it's smart... fastidious...dainty

. . . Youth selects this new sanitary protection

SMARTNESS! Of course you seek it. Every woman does. And smartness, in sanitary protection, naturally means Kotex. What else gives you that freedom and grace, that daintiness you insist upon at all times? No wonder youth has made Kotex the accepted sanitary pad!

"I want to feel fastidious even in unrevealed details," says an eastern college girl. "That's why I use Kotex. That's why my friends all use it, too. Oh, they have special reasons, of course. One prefers its marvelous softness. Another likes its surgical purity—a third is keen about Kotex because it deodorizes so effectively. But the thing that it signifies to all of them is perfect daintiness, fastidiousness."

85% of hospitals use Kotex

Can you imagine any more eloquent tribute to Kotex than this? Surgeons in 85% of the hospitals in this country select Kotex filler (Cellucotton absorbent wadding) for their patients! Not only for sanitary pads, but for all surgical dressings! This is the same, identical, Kotex-made Cellucotton.

Kotex means new freedom, new activity, release from discomfort and self-consciousness. It means all the things listed here. Just read them over! Then, if you do not already use it, you'll want to buy a box of Kotex at once.

KOTEX IS SOFT...

1 Not a deceptive softness, that soon packs into chafing hardness. But a delicate, fleecy softness that lasts for hours.

2 In hospitals—Kotex is the identical material used practically EXCLUSIVELY by surgeons in 85% of the country's leading hospitals.

3 Rounded and tapered corners—for inconspicuous protection.

4 Safe, secure . . . keeps your mind at ease.

5 Fastidious . . . the sign of true daintiness.

6 Disposable completely, instantly.

Kotex—45c for 12—at any drug, dry goods or department store; or singly in vending cabinets through West Disinfecting Co.

Kotex Super-Size—65c for 12

[Prices slightly higher in Canada]

Seeing the Stars in Caricature

acter in his bearing. So if a total stranger were to see a photograph of that person he would be unable to tell if the portrait was of a snob or a humble person. But the true caricaturist draws that face in such a manner that a stranger will be able to look at the picture once and know immediately that, Why! He's an awful stuck-up person, isn't he? Do you understand what I'm trying to show you?

YOU ask me what I would put in a portrait of Adolphe Menjou so as to make his appeal and worldliness apparent. First I must tell you what I believe to be the real reason for Menjou's great popularity as the about-town type. I think his whole career may be laid to ill health. I make this statement because I know that Menjou's physical misfortune has materially changed his facial features. He has that look of extreme boredom and sophistication which is the direct result of poor health.

"Do you think that the middle-aged women of the country who flock to the box office to see this perfect example of the cosmopolite would continue to swoon at his blasé face if they knew him as the true caricaturist knows him? I doubt it. But the caricaturist doesn't make use of these physical hardships—they picture Menjou as he looks on the screen. And this, by the way, is an easy task. Heavy circles under his eyes . . . two highstrung, nervous lips on a small, pointed mouth . . . a wisp of hair and you have the Menjou of the silver sheet: debonair, cultured—a lover and a gentleman.

BEE stung lips and a pair of wide-open eyes are all that are necessary in a drawing to show the sensuous, luxury loving, free-living character of the once famous Mae Murray.

"I could go on indefinitely and point out the characteristics of all the many personages of Hollywood whom I have had the honor to portrait, but I do not think it essential. I'd like to tell you why I believe that Hollywood has taken the wrong attitude toward the men in my field of endeavor—to explain that caricaturing is a method of criticizing that which nature has been wont to give us in the way of character. Not the physical defects of the body, but the easily changed elements of our alter ego. It is impossible, however, to go into such detail.

"It is enough to remember that caricaturing is much the same as spanking a small child. It should have the same effect in the lives of the older generation. It aims to show the people their faults in such an open and public way that they can't help but profit by the suggestions. I sincerely believe that Hollywood needs a good spanking. And I'm going to give it to them if the suits don't get too troublesome."

A New Kind of Make-Up

Developed by Hollywood's Make-Up Genius

Now Ready for YOU!

Under a Strange Light in Hollywood, we Found Out How to Avoid "Off-Color" and "Spotty" Effects in Make-Up.

RENEE ADOREE

JOAN CRAWFORD

BEAUTY is a business in the motion picture colony, so we have studied make-up for years. And now you may benefit from our experience and gain added beauty through this new knowledge.

Under the blazing "Kleig" lights, more trying than sunlight, "stars" are photographed. Make-up must be perfect, or grotesque effects result. To meet this severe test, Max Factor developed a new kind of make-up, based on cosmetic color-harmony, which photographed perfectly. Today, Max Factor's Make-Up is used almost exclusively by the "stars".

Hollywood, California—Max Factor making up the beautiful eyes of Irene Rich.

Then from this discovery came powders, rouges and other essentials for day and evening use, based on the same principle of cosmetic color harmony. Their success in Hollywood was instantaneous. Now thousands use only Max Factor's Society Make-Up.

Perhaps you have worried about your make-up and have searched for ways to enhance your beauty—and still you're not satisfied. The reason is simply this—there is more to make-up than merely a bit of powder and a dab of rouge. What is this wonderful secret of make-up? Why have Hollywood's "stars" and society women given up the haphazard use of cosmetics and adopted Society Make-Up? Now you may know. You may have the very make-up, learn the very method, used by these beautiful women.

Imagine Make-Up so Faultless that even Under the Blazing Glare of the Motion Picture Lights it Photographs Perfectly. With Max Factor Society Make-Up You, Too, Will Learn the Secret of the "Stars".

FREE Complexion Analysis by Max Factor, Hollywood's Genius of Make-Up

The one way to secure the exact make-up to best harmonize with your complexion, accentuate your beauty, and enhance the charm of your personality is to have your complexion analyzed and your personal requirements determined. This Max Factor will do for you, without charge or obligation. He will also send you a copy of "The New Art of Make-Up" which fully explains cosmetic color harmony and describes the correct method of make-up. Remember, you will never know how beautiful you can really be until you obtain the make-up secrets so highly valued by the "stars" of Hollywood. Carefully fill in the coupon and mail today to Max Factor in Hollywood.

Never Be Conscious of Your Make-Up

If your make-up is "off-color" or too glaring, it over-shadows your personality. It becomes a worry, destroying that self-assurance which is an attribute of every charming woman. Permit Max Factor to analyze your complexion, as he has done for hundreds of screen stars, and recommend a make-up which will be just a part of your own natural beauty. Just fill in and mail the coupon today.

Backtrailing Movie History

The girl at the left is just another one of the great army of unknowns who have come and gone in the picture industry. Harold Lloyd was playing "Lonesome Luke" parts in those days, to the accompaniment of Bebe Daniels.

TEN years ago, the late Gladys Brockwell, then a very popular Fox star, suggested that a screen test be made of Reatha Watson, a beautiful young scenario writer under contract.

Her advice was taken; but the test was horrible, due to poor makeup, improper lighting, or one of a dozen factors that make or mar a face in films. The disappointed young scenarist wept her disappointment on Gladys' sympathetic shoulder.

A few months later another test was taken, this time justifying Miss Brockwell's faith in the girl who took the name of Barbara La Marr and became perhaps the most colorful star the screen has ever known.

The Birth of a Nation was shown at a revival recently, and it was interesting to note many now-famous faces in extra and bit rôles: Bessie Love, Elmo Lincoln (who, by the way, played two extra rôles), Elmer Clifton (now a well-known director), and Enid Bennett could be recognized in mere flashes.

Raoul Walsh also figured prominently in the action, while of course the public is familiar with the fact that the cast included Wallace Reid, Bobby Harron and George Siegmann, all now deceased.

In 1919, John Ford was directing J. Farrell MacDonald in two-reelers; today they are still going strong, making Fox features.

MacDonald studied for the priesthood, got a couple of degrees in civil engineering from Yale, hoboed around the world, was a newspaper reporter, a grand opera singer, musician on an ocean liner, and finally director-actor in the "infant industry".

When Vitagraph had its famous "housecleaning", J. Farrell was the only director not kicked out. He directed many Fox productions before he signed a long-term acting contract.

Twenty years ago the methods employed for sound pictures made it tough going for the speakers, according to Guy Oliver, who tells of his early experiences working with his wife for Adolph Zukor, who was sending "talking pictures" over the Keith and Proctor circuit.

The method described was for Oliver and his wife to be seated behind a screen but where they could see the picture, and then speak the parts of the characters as they appeared. Although only one reel in length, they were shown four times a day with a vaudeville program, and the strain on the invisible speakers' voices was so great that they had to eat white vaseline by the tube.

Thirteen years ago, Mary Pickford signed her million-dollar contract with Adolph Zukor.

Ten years ago, John Boles was with the Army of Occupation, stationed on the Rhine.

Norma Talmadge, whose mileage on close-ups runs high, wide, and handsome, played the title rôle in her first motion picture — and never showed her face.

The comedy-drama, made at the old Vitagraph studio, was called The Household Pest, and dealt with the adventures of an amateur camera fiend. Throughout the picture, Norma kept her head buried beneath a black camera cloth! So much for fame!

Singing a Carol in Praise of Sue played havoc with her desire to meander. She must remain in Hollywood and make pictures—and more pictures.

LIKE most girls born to wealth, she is unconscious of money values. She buys what appeals to her, giving no thought to its cost. I do not insinuate that she would attempt to purchase Catalina Islands or a steamship; she realizes the limitations of her fortune. But she orders fifteen-dollar hosiery as thoughtlessly as the average girl asks for the one-dollar brand.

Sue is a trifle spoiled. That she is not entirely spoiled is a rare tribute to her common sense and sweetness. It is difficult for a young girl to live through childhood surrounded by gold and servants and remain untouched. She is accustomed to having things done for her. When things are not done to please her, she becomes fretful. However, she is the first to realize this shortcoming and make atonement and is so devilishly sweet about her atonements that one really appreciates the fault that causes her to repent.

Sue is five feet, two inches tall and weighs 107 pounds. Her hair is dark brown and naturally unruly. Her eyes are brown and bright and will not behave. Her lips are well shaped. Her teeth are tiny, pearly white and even. She washes them several times daily and pays monthly visits to the dentist. Her skin is fair-olive. She bathes twice daily and lounges in perfumed water after each bath.

Tan, bright red and light blue are her favorite colors and she wears them often. She rolls her stockings; she seldom wears garters. She wears her hats perched high on her head as I have never seen hats worn by any other girl.

SUE doesn't like to talk about her personal life and affairs for publication. She can drive an automobile but she prefers sitting in the back seat. She is an atrocious golf player and not much better at tennis. She is a fair swimmer. Her bridge is fine; she will play for any stakes. She adores Russian caviar with ground egg and onion. She does not smoke, but she is no prude; she is a good sport.

Her sense of humor is better than average. She even enjoys a joke of which she is victim, a rare thing in women. She loves to make long distance telephone calls, and conversations by wire with New York friends are no rarity in her life.

Sue knows there are years to come. She will marry again some day; not for several years, however. Then she will retire from professional life. She will have children. She wants a boy and a girl, the son to be the older.

In other words, beneath the grease paint and the ermines and the fair-olive skin lies the heart of a woman—the heart of a mother.

Traveling Man's Wife Wins $3620.00 Cash Prize

A Dream That Came True Because of a Devoted Wife's Vision.

ONE evening, before starting on another selling trip, Mr. Webb was gloomy and discouraged. "It's the same old grind that gets you nowhere," he murmured. "For years we've been wanting a home of our own but we're no nearer it now than ever."

"If I could only do something," his wife said earnestly.

"There's nothing you can do, honey," he replied sadly. "It's up to me to make enough money for a down payment. The money we pay for rent would take care of the balance."

"Nothing you can do" . . . the words rang in her ears during the days he was on the road. How they humiliated her, made her feel useless and futile!

One morning she read an advertisement in a magazine telling of a Cash Distribution Plan by which hundreds of men and women, boys and girls, were receiving up to $2,800.00 in cash. The plan seemed too good to be true. Those who took advantage of this plan did not have to spend a cent.

At first she was skeptical. It did not seem possible that she could share in the awards to be distributed, but the thought of the difference that $2,800.00 in cash could make dulled her disbelief. Had she not acted despite her doubts and sent for information, she would never have had the happy surprise that was hers when she received a telegram announcing she had been awarded $3,620.00. Her surprise was all the greater because her cash award was larger than she expected because of her promptness.

For a few days she went around in a daze until the certified check for $3,620.00 actually arrived. Almost on the heels of the postman came her husband, returning from a selling trip. It was all she could do to keep from shouting the wonderful news before he took off his hat and coat. Afraid of his gibes, she had not told him of her hopes.

"Let's not live in this old apartment any longer," she cried, seating herself on the arm of his chair. "Let's have a home of our own."

"But, darling," he protested sadly, "you know we haven't even the money for a down payment."

"We have—we have," she cried, showing him the certified check for $3,620.00. "We can have that home of which we have always dreamed.

There were others who read the advertisement Mrs. Webb read, others who wanted a home, but while they merely wished, she acted. Mrs. Webb has been but one of the many to benefit from the famous Cash Distribution Plans conducted in the past. Mr. I. A. Nystrom won $3,375.00, Miss Anna Linke won $3,135.00, Mrs. Fannie Kelley won $2,320.00, Mrs. Robt. Ellington won $1,750.00 and Mr. E. N. Garrett won $2,320.00.

Another of these plans is on now. By it, hundreds of cash awards ranging up to $3,500.00 in cash will be distributed. If you want to share in the cash to be distributed, fill out and mail in the coupon below.

Mr. L. E. Wilferd,
Dept. 3748, 315 S. Peoria St.,
Chicago, Ill.

I wish to share in your present Cash Distribution Plan without any cost or obligation to me now or later.

DRAMA

Behind That Curtain—A skillful combination of murder, mystery and a powerful love affair in an outstanding talkie based on the story by Earl Derr Biggers. Lovely Lois Moran marries a rotter, but sticks it out until the right man, Warner Baxter, comes along. They run off together, all in a perfectly nice way, and subsequent romance leads to a murder and a thrilling solution. Miss Moran and Baxter offer compelling performances and Gilbert Emory, recruited from legit, is very effective.—Fox.

The Single Standard—Greta Garbo has the rôle of an adventurous woman, who looked for love and took it where and how she found it. Nils Asther is a vagabond painter, who accompanies her on an unconventional cruise of the South Seas and leaves her to face scandal alone. Johnny Mack Brown is the faithful lover, who protects her with marriage until Asther returns to threaten the happy home. Greta is forced to choose between the two, and her choice furnishes an unusual and startling climax.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Her Private Life—A highly dramatic and forceful talkie in which Billie Dove seizes the opportunity to render really great acting. If you are not a Billie Dove fan, you will be, after witnessing her in the rôle of a lady of English nobility who goes to New York City and encounters ill fortune. Walter Pidgeon gives a notable performance, playing opposite Miss Dove, and the cast includes Thelma Todd, Roland Young, and Montagu Love.—First National-Vitaphone.

Say It With Songs—Al Jolson and Davey Lee are together again in a story similar to The Singing Fool. This time Al is a radio singer, who goes to jail and, while there, gives up his wife when he learns she loves a doctor. Out of jail, he is living with Davey when the lad is hit by a truck. To save him from being a cripple, Al gives up Davey to the doctor, leading to the big moment when the child hears daddy's voice over the radio. There is plenty of tear-jerking, but the sentiment is true and believable, and Al's golden voice gives no evidence of diminishing power.—Warner Brothers.

Evangeline—This is Henry Wadsworth Longfellow's poem transferred to celluloid in a series of beautiful pictures. However, the beauty of Dolores Del Rio in picturesque costumes and settings makes the picture something very comforting to look at. An enchanting musical score also assisted Edwin Carewe's efforts to make this a movie.—United Artists.

The Argyle Case—Thomas Meighan and Lila Lee present evidence of splendid speaking voices in a talkie that ranks as one of the best mystery dramas of the year. Meighan is the detective, who releases Lila Lee from unjust suspicion and detects the real doer of the crime. H. B. Warner is—as usual—excellent as the family attorney.—Warner Brothers.

Wonder of Women—A picture, half silent and half talkie, that starts from scratch with a hatful of handicaps, but manages to grip you in spite of anything. A strong cast, a good story, and Clarence Brown's able direction bring it safely over the hurdles. Lewis Stone, Leila Hyams, and Peggy Wood, of stage fame, are outstanding in the cast.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Dark Streets—Jack Mulhall has the first dual rôle of the talkies. He is both Pat, the policeman and good brother, and Mike, the gangster and bad brother. Each is in love with Lila Lee, and she finds it hard to choose. One night there is a gang war. Ten square toes are turned to the daisies. Is it Pat? Or is it Mike in Pat's clothing? That's the big thrill.—First National-Vitaphone.

The Love Trap—Laura La Plante goes chorus girl in a talkie that reveals her in a peck of trouble despite the fact that her intentions are the best in the world. Her girl friends advise wild parties as the way to get along. Of course she believes them, and the mean man, Robert Ellis, tries to take advantage of her. For virtue's sake, she rushes out onto the street and into the arms of Neil Hamilton—and love. The cast is excellent, but don't try to figure out the plot.—Universal.

The Valiant—This gives Paul Muni, a new screen actor, a splendid opportunity to do his stuff. He has a great gift of registering emotion after emotion, while scarcely moving a muscle. Other actors, who think they must scream and howl, should take notice. The picture ranges all the way from being very nearly great to just plain mediocre. It is a yarn about how a murderer goes to the chair without revealing his identity—all for the sake of his family.—Fox.

Street Girl—An unusual Betty Compson—sweet, instead of the usual hard-boiled Betty—has the lead in this talkie. Betty, a wandering waif, is welcomed from the cold by four boys who have an orchestra. She goes to live with them—everything conventional, of course—and shows them how to put their act across. The orchestra gives plenty of opportunity for song hits. Jack Oakie furnishes plenty of comedy.—RKO.

The Last of Mrs. Cheney—The plot of this talkie isn't much, but the lines are everything—especially with Norma Shearer speaking in the leading rôle. Norma repeats the success she won in her first talkie, The Trial of Mary Dugan. The cast, with the exception of Hedda Hopper, is entirely British. Basil Rathbone shows much promise as the leading man, and George Barraud does great work as Charles, the butler.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

College Love—Football against a frolicsome college background. George Lewis is the breezy hero and Dorothy Gulliver is the gal.—Universal.

White Collars—As amusing as the famous stage play. Conrad Nagel is the millionaire and Leila Hyams is his wife. Bessie Love and Robert Ober supply the comedy. —Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Why the IT Girl Wants to Marry grams full of a lot of laughs. I like laughter. He wired me about the Zercon ring I was wearing. He could even remember the ring, while I could scarcely recall his features.

He came to Hollywood. One night the telephone rang. I answered.

"Hello, Clara; this is Harry Richman."

I tried to picture his face and couldn't. He was living with Mr. Schenck. He still is. He asked me to a dinner party. He sang; he told stories. I loved his voice, his personality.

The next week Mr. Schenck had a yachting party, my first yachting trip. I had always thought I would dislike them, but with such a marvelous crowd invited—

WE WENT to Agua Caliente. Harry was thoughtful and gracious and unselfish. Men in Hollywood get so accustomed to women being independent that they forget the little courtesies which just seem to come naturally to New York men. It isn't exactly the fault of the men in Hollywood, it's the fault of the women. They make money; often they make much more than the men who escort them. They do not expect attention.

It seemed so strange. I had been used to doing things for myself. It intrigued me to have a man who did them for me; to have my room a constant bower of flowers; to have him send clever, funny little trinkets.

The men gambled. I liked the way Harry gambled. He lost heavily, but he made no fuss about it. "It is part of gambling. I expect to lose—" I like a good loser.

The men seemed to like him. I admire men who are popular with men as well as with women.

A week later we went down there again with a party. I was ill. We work so hard in this business that even for a girl with my energy there must be reactions. One morning we were sitting out in the patio. My cousin, Billy, was with us. I was feeling low.

"I think you should have someone to look out for you. I think I'd be a good one to do it," ventured Harry.

He said it in such a vague, bashful, cute way.

My cousin Billy said, "I think that would be swell."

"I think it would be nice, myself," I answered.

WHEN I came home, I went to bed for a few weeks to get that rest and quiet. He brought me love birds, canaries. He never came to see me with empty arms. He always brought the things himself instead of having them sent. A platinum clock for my desk, bottles of perfumes—and always flowers.

I began to think that I had met the man who would make an ideal husband. I don't want a cheap romance made out of it. I respect Harry. He is amusing; he is entertaining. He pulls me out of the dumps. He's the kind who tousels your hair, yet protects you.

WHY should they try to force me to set the wedding date? Everyone asks when. Harry seems to me, today, to be the ideal husband; but I want to test our love. I want to test and test, to put our love through every process, like they do in laboratories! I plan to go to Europe in September. That will mean separation. Separation tells the secret, I have been told. If we both withstand this separation, then—

I really have more sense, I believe, than people give me credit for. I am not testing Harry's devotion in comparison to other men's. I am going out with no one else. I am merely getting really acquainted and giving him the same opportunity.

Of course, I have been interested in other men—all women have love-infatuations. Gilbert Roland, as I have said before, was my first love. We were to have been married, but as always, I stopped to consider. We had no money; he was afraid he wouldn't succeed. And we were always hurting each other, as is the way of very young lovers. Outsiders interfered, causing quarrels, and a final rupture. Besides, we were too young to marry. But the memory is very sweet and I will always consider him one of the most charming men I ever met.

Harry is a mature, well-balanced man; he's in a position to make one or two pictures a year and then spend the rest of his time as he pleases. We would have time for one another.

ANOTHER man, an older one, whom I once thought I might marry, wanted to change me. He liked the Clara Bow who would come into existence five or six years later. He wanted to tell me how to do my hair, put on my lipstick. He is one of the best friends I have today and I respect him as a man of wisdom, but I do not regret not marrying him.

With Gary Cooper, there were two careers. A big boy whom I wanted to mother and help succeed. Gary Cooper wasn't dominating enough for me.

But Harry has had experience; he's traveled all over the world. He can subtlely influence me while not even seeming to influence. He has all of the qualities which I have been searching for in one individual.

It is a great risk for a man to marry a screen woman. He doesn't realize this until he has had a chance to thoroughly study our working conditions. Harry is having that chance.

Once I know for sure, I'll do it quickly. It might be today or six months from now. How can I set the date for the wedding?

TALKIE TALK

A monthly feature devoted to bringing our readers the latest, most authentic news of talkie personalities and developments.

Don't Shout

AN EXPERIMENT conducted at the tenth annual convention of the American Federation of Organizations for the Hard of Hearing, recently held at Cleveland, Ohio, proves that members of these organizations have not lost their screen entertainment through talking pictures.

A talkie was reproduced for the 200 delegates, to discover whether the hard of hearing can enjoy this new entertainment. The delegates reported hearing the picture in the following degrees: 125, perfectly; 60, fair or better; 9, poorly; and 7, not at all.

From Where You Sit

THE talkies are said to sound better from the back seats. A man who sat in row Z tells us it sounded like H.

Laugh on Salary

EVERY studio should have a laugh chorus, says Luther Reed, RKO director.

"It would prove invaluable in timing dialogue. No actor can judge how long to wait for any audience to laugh before going ahead with his patter. If he waits for a laugh and doesn't get it, the picture drags. If he goes right ahead, the laugh may ruin his next gag.

"If we had about one hundred average American theater-goers to laugh spontaneously and honestly it would be invaluable in the timing of dialogue."

Evidently Mr. Reed overlooks the fact that people paid to laugh would not laugh honestly.

All-Dog Barkie!

WE'VE had so many all-star talkies that now one of the big film companies has got busy and is going to give us an all-dog barkie! M-G-M is the studio that thought up this idea for a very interesting sound novelty.

Frank Ross, who makes his screen debut in "Sweetie", with Nancy Carroll, points out—with respect, but without fear—that the microphone will play an important part in his future. Frank is quite sure that mike will be his best friend.

They are producing Hot Dogs, with fifty trained canine actors and actresses comprising the entire cast. There will be the shy little sweetheart, the "John Gilbert" lover and the villain. There will be plenty of interesting scenes, too, including a cabaret and a courtroom scene, with the dogs all dressed up in semblance of human characters.

Jules White and Zion Myers (Carmel's brother) wrote the scenario and are directing the film.

Novelty Talking Films

JAMES A. FITZPATRICK, of the motion picture company bearing his name, has introduced a novelty for short talking subjects.

The unusual films are called "Movie Horoscopes" and a series of twelve will be made, one for each month of the year, individually titled—such as, "People Born in January," etc.

Birthstones and natal flowers will be reproduced with the aid of technicolor process. An interesting musical score will be played in the background of the scene.

Stolen Notes

CAMERAMEN used to sneak around to catch some unusual action. Now they sneak around to catch some unusual sound that might be used in a picture.

High up in a pepper tree a little mocking bird sang out his love song. He sang for an hour, but there was no return love call, so he took to his wings and soared away. However, his song was not in vain, for, all unbeknown to him, a microphone had been placed within a few feet of him and every note of his symphony recorded.

Chairs are Talkie Problem

THE lordly director in his canvas armchair is a tradition that has passed with the advent of the talking picture. The portable chair creaks—hence it can't be used on the sound-proof stages. So, like the megaphone, it is passing into oblivion. Also, because the director has to keep under the window of the sound-proof camera booth, he can't loll in an ordinary chair at all.

Lionel Barrymore, when directing, has a simple method—he sits cross-legged, like a Buddha, on the floor.

William de Mille keeps a low position beneath the camera booth window by sitting on a very low chair, raised just nine inches from the floor. His brother, Cecil, uses a specially constructed heavy wooden chair that can't creak.

And Rupert Julian uses a stool with rubber tips that cannot scrape the floor or make noise of any kind.

Whether or not the fans approve talking pictures, they do seem to enjoy hearing Billie Dove speak. Miss Dove, assisted by her secretary, is answering some of the thousands of letters fans have written, praising her charming voice which they discovered in "Careers" and "Her Private Life".

What the Public Thinks of the Talkies

DOES the public prefer talkies to silent pictures?

That is the question emphatically answered with a decisive "yes" by thousands of movie fans who have expressed their views to SCREEN SECRETS.

In an effort to determine whether or not the public likes talkies, some months ago SCREEN SECRETS offered $5 each month for the best letter by a reader giving a frank opinion of the talkies.

"Talkies are here to stay; 95 per cent of the public wants them; you can't satisfy us any more with 'dumbies,'" writes a fan of the fair sex in San Diego, California—expressing in few words the consensus of opinion found in 85 per cent of the 15,000 letters submitted to SCREEN SECRETS.

In the overwhelming proportion of seven to one, the writers favored talkies and paramount among their reasons were:

1. Fan and favorite are brought closer together, establishing a greater bond of friendship, and the players attain more personality, making them more real and lifelike.
2. The intended illusion of the motion picture is strengthened and makes one believe he is living the story depicted on the screen.
3. A wealth of new talent is being brought to the screen, including famous stage stars, singers, dancers and musicians whose entertaining has been denied to millions. Grand opera with its famous personalities and the leading figures of the concert stage are also now available to all.

Most of the objections to talkies are accountable to the fact that this new mode of motion pictures is still in its infancy. The familiar foreign noises of the early talkies, the faulty reproduction, due to inexperienced operators, and many of the other recording and reproducing defects which have discouraged fans, are being eliminated.

However, typical of many other objections is that of L. K. of Brookline, Massachusetts, who writes, "To me, the talkies seem to defeat the biggest enjoyments of silent pictures. That is the chance to relax and look without listening, to let your imagination play without of necessity being so keenly alive to the reality of it all. Leaving the silent picture, one can remember them clearer and longer, and thereby enjoy them long after. A talkie, like a stage play, leaves you confused with its din."

OTHER reasons these objectors advance for their preference for the silent drama are: that it offers more rest and relaxation than is possible with the din and dialogue of the talkies, that dialogue is unsuited to a movie theater where patrons are continually entering and leaving and one is likely to enter in the middle of a picture, and that the talkie demands mental exertion which the movie fan is attempting to escape by attending the theater.

"What will happen to the many foreign stars?" questions J. B. of Wilmington, Delaware. Scores of others were of the same mind and many who heartily favored the talkies, declared that if the talkies would bring about the film demise of these stars, they would vote for silent pictures.

While the poll denoted that many fans have had their dreams of certain stars shattered when they heard them talk, it also indicated that just as many have been won to the followings of stars when hearing them for the first time. About three in every five letters brought the information that the talkies strengthen a star's personality; consequently increasing his or her popularity.

Hobnobbing with the Film Folk

asked her what the extras were doing, snitching lunch boxes that way. Finally she told me.

"Why, they're taking them for breakfast, of course!" she answered. "No girl does that if she has any money; but if she hasn't—well, hunger is a fierce thing, you know."

Jack Barrymore's Come-back

ALL the Barrymores are on a pedestal, of course.

The other night at a party an idealistic youth watched John Barrymore taking a drink and listened to some of his picturesque language.

The youth burst out with:

"Ah, you lead me to the heights with your acting; then, at a party, you drop me to the depths!"

Jack Barrymore paused a minute.

"Well, well," he drawled, "somebody panning a Barrymore! Wish I could do it myself!" And walked clamly away.

Kathryn and Her Mamma

IF YOU read it in a story, of course you'd never believe it—that tale of Kathryn Crawford finding her mother after she had been lost to her for years.

Kathryn's father, it seems, never supported his young wife and two little daughters. The mother had to do it. Then when she was taken desperately ill and went to a hospital, he took the children and fled with them. Ten weeks later Mrs. Crawford searched everywhere for her children, but couldn't find them.

When Kathryn was interviewed a while ago, she gave out that her dearest wish was to find her long-lost mother. A friend away back in Wellesley College, where she was employed, read the news, telephoned to Kathryn's mother, and they both frantically tried to reach Kathryn that night by long distance telephone. However, they found it couldn't be achieved. A picture star is well guarded. But telegrams and letters finally did their work, and Kathryn sent her sister back east to bring the mother to California.

"Mamma is just like I always imagined her," Kathryn says. "She is awfully pretty and sweet, you know. She has had a rather hard time in life, but we hope that's all over now. Know what I did the other night? Made her sing the old songs she used to sing my sister and me to sleep with when we were tiny girls. She says she used to sing them, after she got well, and cry and think of us."

Crazy For Blondes

ARTHUR is proud of the fact, during a period of three months, he escorted fourteen different girls to seventeen dances. He repeated himself only one time and went to two dances alone. Of course, when he ages a few years, the fickle Mr. Lake will discover that it is much more difficult to get and hold one lovely girl than it is to arrange a one-night-stand-with-no-return-dates with a score of girls. But Arthur is at present enjoying that Harold Teen stage of life when variety indicates that he is a man-about-town.

He blushes a scarlet red whenever automobiles and time payments are mentioned. He knows all about motors and instalment plan purchases. Twenty months ago, Arthur purchased his mother a Christmas present for Christmas, 1929. It was an automobile. He has just made the final payment, the car has been run fifteen thousand miles—and Christmas is still a month away.

A few months ago, Arthur's mechanical twist of mind turned seaward. He purchased an outboard motor boat which he named The Gedunk—in honor of his rôle in Harold Teen. The Gedunk was docked in a private sea garage at Redondo, and every afternoon Arthur and his girl-friend-of-the-day would drive to the beach for an excursion across Redondo Bay.

ALAS, The Gedunk was no sea going liner. It was a great little boat for the smooth waters of the bay—but Arthur became ambitious. From the mouth of the little inlet, he could see the inviting expanse of the broad Pacific, Now, while I am certain that Captain Lake had no thought of motoring to China, he did leave the confines of the bay and dared the high breakers of the ocean. And it is my sad duty to report that The Gedunk is no more. I mean, it is no more to be seen floating across the smooth waters of Redondo bay. It lies on the bed of the great Pacific ocean. Only the fact that both Arthur and his girl-friend-of-the-time are excellent swimmers prevented a more serious disaster for Captain Lake had hardly piloted his craft two hundred yards from the mouth of the bay before a huge wave swept over the boat and it plunged straight for the bottom of the ocean.

Before I sign off, let me add that because I have told you these things, is no reason for you to disbelieve the other interviewers who speak of Arthur's ambitions and fine qualities. He is really a great kid and one for whom I have a great admiration and respect. And even though he is one of the most popular youngsters in motion pictures today, I am quite certain that Arthur's past is as nothing compared to what his future holds. I think the kid is a natural born actor and that he possesses one of the finest, most charming personalities in Hollywood.

Making Play While the Sun Shines

BILLIE DOVE and her husband, Irving Willat, spend the week-ends at Malibu and plan to build there next spring. Miss Dove, who is an ardent believer in the healing qualities of the sun's rays, sleeps on the bleached sands for hours every day she can get away from the studio. Willat's hobby is cabinet-making, and if he can spare the time, he plans to erect their dwelling himself, with the aid of a plumber and a plasterer.

Louise Fazenda has a lovely home there, where she and her husband Hal Wallis, associate executive of First National studios, entertain quite lavishly—living very close to Al Rockett, former head of the First National studios. Rockett wasn't well for quite a while, but for more than a month lolled around the sand at his Malibu place, wrapped in a blazer and a bathing suit.

A familiar figure along the beach is Karl Dane, the M-G-M comic—his angly shaggy frame in a bathing suit provokes comment and humor.

Jascha Heifetz, the musician, and Miss Vidor, his wife, had a party at which all the furniture was moved out, sawdust was strewn on the floor and haystacks were provided in lieu of chairs; and all the men came in overalls and the girls in rompers.

ANNA Q. NILSSON, who injured her hip many months ago in an accident while working in a picture, attributes her complete recovery to the easy life she led for more than a year at Malibu. Sam Zimbalist, who edited The Broadway Melody, and his wife often visit Miss Nilsson at her beach home where the actress frequently gives parties. One of her favorite dishes is a fruit salad served with Danish pastry, which she makes herself.

There's only one telephone in the village. It is in the general merchandise store, and oddly enough, there are very few calls over it. The most active week the boy who chases errands at the store had, was when Clara Bow announced her engagement to Harry Richman and the newspaper reporters burned the wires trying to reach her. The difficulty of reaching anyone at Malibu is in the noncommunicative attitude of the man who runs the store. Residents do not want to talk to ANYONE.

The telegraph company does a land-office business at the colony—for telegrams are the only things they will receive there. It is an unwritten law that colonists must forget their city ties when they go beach-ing.

Solitaire and Russian bank are popular among the games played at Malibu, while volley ball lends itself to the great outdoor pastimes which meet with popular approval. The tennis bugs are Ralph Forbes, Warner Baxter, Conrad Nagel and Theodore von Eltz, who has a fine amateur standing as a tennis player.

MANY of the homes have tennis courts and swimming pools, and croquet is one of the most popular games of the colony. Picnic parties are frequently indulged in, with fried chicken, potato salad and coffee brewed out in the open in big pots. Big open fireplaces are featured, too, where marshmallow toasts and weiner roasts are made possible.

Louise Fazenda makes a "gypsy stew" that is delicious and every once in a while she invites a crowd over for a meal. This stew consists of lamb, beef, all kinds of vegetables including parsley and green peppers. She cooks it over an open fire in a huge iron kettle. With this stew she serves melba toast, or rather pours the stew right over the top of a big slice of the buttered toast. What a meal! No one wants dessert after this concoction!

The list of residents reads like the blue book of cinemaland. It includes Ruth Chatterton, Dolores del Rio, Clive Brook, Neil Hamilton, Clara Bow, Fay Bainter, Ronald Colman, Jascha Heifetz and Florence Vidor, Ralph Ince, Richard Barthelmess, William LeBaron, Evelyn Brent, Sydney Franklin, Warner Baxter. B. P. Schulberg and Jesse L. Lasky also own homes there.

With the increasing popularity of Malibu, it looks as if this colony will assume first place as the most unique residential and playtime district in the West.

Pat's Rolls Noisy

PAT O'MALLEY motored down Hollywood boulevard in a flivver of ancient vintage. The windows rattled much after the manner of the drum in a night club orchestra. The fenders waved in the breeze.

"How times do change," sighed one of the old-timers. "I remember when Pat rode to work in a chauffeur-driven Rolls-Royce."

Three years ago when Pat was a popular leading man, his salary was $1,000 a week. Then came lean days—days when Pat's only employment was in Poverty Row, home of the "quickies." Finally, Pat left Hollywood, "one jump ahead of the sheriff," as he himself expresses it.

Came the talkies. United Artists cast Pat in Alibi and paid him $1,250 a week. The critics said he was great. Now Pat can't fill all of the calls for his services.

Did Pat buy another Rolls? He did not. Instead, he paid $125 for a rusty Ford.

"Being known as a heavy spender is great while it lasts," says Pat, "but the boys on whom you spend your coin seem to forget you when it's all gone. What used to go to the auto dealers and tailors, now goes to the bank. I've learned my lesson."

EARLE E. LIEDERMAN—The Muscle Builder
Author of "Muscle Building," "Science of Wrestling," Secrets of Strength," "Here's Health," "Endurance," etc.

Does She Love You Enough?

Give a Thought to Your Physical Self

If your wife or sweetheart acts cool and dissatisfied with you, give a thought to your physical self. A woman looks at more than a man's face. She's thinking of his ability to protect her; provide for her; of her pride in his appearance in a bathing suit, on the athletic field, on the dance floor.

When you hear a woman exclaim, "Oh, what a handsome man" she's not looking at his face alone. She's sized him up from top to toe. Those broad shoulders, that graceful athletic stride, the well-shaped neck and head, those strong, muscular arms and legs. They thrill any woman. Every wife and every sweetheart wants her man to be like that. Are you?

Well, you can be!

I Build Strong, Handsome, Healthy Bodies

People call me the Muscle-Builder. I make men's bodies strong and healthy. My list of over 100,000 wonderful successes includes doctors and lawyers, bookkeepers and clerks, grandfathers and grandsons, fat men, and skinny men, weaklings and nervous wrecks. By a method of scientific body-building I go all over your body, strengthening your internal organs, broadening your shoulders, cutting off fat, and generally turning you inside out until you're a healthy, handsome fighting he-man any woman will be proud of.

In just 30 days I add one whole inch of live, flexible steely muscle to each of your arms and two full inches of rippling, muscular strength across your chest. Your legs will become straight and strong, your head snap back erect, and little lumps of red-blooded muscle will begin to stand out on your broadening shoulders. What a hit you are going to make with that girl of yours. How proud and happy she will be!

90 Days and You Have One

But I'm not through with you yet. I don't make men by halves. Give me just 60 days more and then look yourself over. Now you sure are somebody. The pathway to happiness and success is easy.

People will ask to meet you. Successful business men will realise that here is another man to accept as one of their own group. Your boss will treat you with a new respect, and that girl of yours will have that look of love and affection in her eyes that in itself will more than repay you.

I Do More Than Promise; I Guarantee It

With a body like that the thrill of living is as great as the thrill you get when you fall in love. It's wonderful! Just check off on your fingers what such a body gives you—pep, vitality, health, strength, love, affection—everything a man desires.

What a picture you'll be in a bathing suit. What a sight in a gymnasium. You'll be a magnet for all women's eyes. That healthy, aggressive, erect stride of the man who knows what he wants and is going to get it, just commands attention.

Well, that's the story in a nut-shell. If you're man enough to work a little for the sake of your strength, success and happiness, just sit right down and mail me this coupon. It won't cost you a penny, and you can see for yourself why thousands of men have so much faith in Earle Liederman, the Muscle-Builder.

What do you think of that? I don't ask one cent. And it's the peppiest piece of reading you ever laid your eyes on. I swear you'll never blink an eyelash till you've turned the last cover. And there's 48 full-page photos of myself and some of my prize-winning pupils. This is the finest art gallery of strong men ever assembled. And every last one of them is shouting my praises. Look them over. If you don't get a kick out of this book, you had better roll over—you're dead. Come on, then. Take out the old pen or pencil and sign your name and address to the coupon. One Sweet Song

I just dropped out of nowhere onto a picture set and started singing and I'd like to have them know that my whole life wasn't one grand sweet song."

"Well, if you insist, Mr. Boles, we'll have the selling-newspapers-on-the-corner episode."

"But it wasn't anything like that, really. You see, I was born in the northwestern part of Texas," I knew that was true—the drawl proved it—"in a little town of about six thousand people." (Evidently that was where he got this idea about putting his feet on the desk.) "It was called Greenville and it was located in what is known as the black waxy country. All the soil around there was black loam and when it rained, that soil soaked up the water until it seemed there was no bottom to the roads. Wagons loaded with cotton would sink to the hubs and all the horses (only he says "hawses") in the country couldn't pull them out. They just had to wait until it dried up. The sidewalks were built up about three feet higher than the street and were just board walks. You could hear anyone coming a mile. Well, that part doesn't make much difference, but that's the kind of a country it was, any way.

WE LIVED at one end of town and father's bank was at the other end, and it was my duty, as well as my joy and pride, to hitch up the horse to the single buggy and drive down Lee street all by myself to take father's lunch to him. My daily trip was the envy of all the kids in town. Seems funny, now, doesn't it, a banker eating his lunch out of a tin pail? But it didn't seem out of place then.

"I was soloist in high school, and pitcher on the ball team. I never had much to do in the line of chores so when I wasn't out in the main street practicing ball, I was out in the back yard singing some love ditty. If I could persuade someone to listen, fine; if not, I would warble anyway. I would like to have played the piano but in Texas only girls played that instrument, and rather than be called a sissy, I gave up the idea. I'm sorry now that I did.

"I graduated with my class, sang a solo at the graduation exercises, and then trotted off to the University of Texas, at Austin, for four years. I studied languages and sciences with the expectation of some day becoming the family doctor. Of course there was a glee club to which I belonged. The director of this club chose eight of his best singers, of which little Johnny was one, and took us out on a chautauqua tour. We sang in tents, but we were paid for it and really enjoyed the tour.

"It was about that time the war broke out. I enlisted with a number of other college boys and was sent across. I was over there eighteen months and in the army two years.

WHEN I came back, my ambition to become a doctor had left me. I had lost two whole years and going back to school, picking up the old threads, beginning again, didn't appeal to me. Then, too, I felt that a man who was old enough to fight for his country was too old to permit his father to continue to pay for his education.

"I wanted to go into business. I was nervous. I felt I had to be outdoors. About the only business around Greenville was cotton growing. I started in rearing the downy stuff and expected to make a fortune in no time. However, fortunes aren't as easily made on plantations as they are in young minds, and I was sort of looking for a way to get out and yet not lose anything. All this time I was singing around at benefits and funerals just because I enjoyed singing, never with any thought of making it a career.

"One day Oscar Seagle, a singing instructor from New York City heard me sing. He came up to me and said, 'Boy, you are wasting your time trying to raise cotton. You should be studying voice.'

"I explained to him that I hadn't the money to go away to study, but he persuaded me to dispose of my cotton fields and accompany him to his home in Glens Falls, New York. He made me his business manager and secretary, thus enabling me to pay for my lessons. To cover living expenses, I taught French and voice to beginners.

"Mr. Seagle took fifty of his students to Europe, and I went along as student, secretary and business manager for the entire troupe. While there I met Mr. Seagle's old teacher, Jean de Reszke, one of the greatest of living tenors. He had enough interest in me to give me lessons in voice. I studied with him until I felt that my low finances demanded I return to New York.

I LANDED in New York with only fifty dollars, but lots of high hopes. And even though I tramped the streets for four months looking for work, I never lost hope. I was living with a chap who had a good radio and no matter how tired I was from the day's tramp, I could tune in on some good music and be happy. I pressed my own pants, polished my shoes and whistled all the time I was doing it. My pal used to say, 'How can you whistle when you haven't a job?'

"There seemed to be plenty of jobs if I wanted to go with a road show, but I had a stubborn idea that if I didn't begin on Broadway, I'd never get there. This attitude of mine used to annoy my pal and he would say, 'John, you'd better grab a road show. It's better than starving. No one begins on Broadway. That comes after years of experience.'

"'But I'll begin on Broadway. See if I don't,' I'd say.

"And I did begin on Broadway. I landed a lead in Little Jessie James and rushed home all excited to tell my pal about it. He looked at me as if I had suddenly gone mad and said, 'I don't believe it!' The song hits were I Love You and Suppose I had Never Met You. I sang these around the apartment for about a week, never again mentioning the show. Finally one day my pal said, 'You scoundrel, I believe you have got a show!'

THE opening night I invited him to come to the theater. He refused saying, 'What! Come over and watch you flop. Not on your life.' But about a week later he did come. After the performance he came back stage. All he said was, 'Why, John, you're not half bad. I was terribly nervous about you when you reached the heavy drama, and I almost left the theater but you got by great.' This, coming from my skeptical side-kick, was real praise.

"It was shortly after that when I experienced the greatest thrill and greatest disappointment of my life. Geraldine Farrar was looking for a leading man to play opposite her in her first attempt at light opera. Of the twenty young men she tried out, I was selected. I was so elated, I was half insane. We rehearsed five weeks. Then came the opening night. The biggest night of my life! It was a grand and glorious opening. It was also the closing night. Miss Farrar was taken ill and was unable to go on with the show.

"That put Johnny back on the pavement without a job and without much heart either. William A. Brady gave me the lead in one of his shows called Kitty's Kisses. Cute name for a show, wasn't it? Cute show, too. It was while I was in this show that Gloria Swanson sent for me to play the lead in Sunya.

"That one lead gave me the picture fever and I came to California. I worked in a few westerns, and was just wondering why I had been foolish enough to leave New York when along came the talkies and with them the male lead in The Desert Song. Then came Song of the West, the first all-talking, all-technicolor, all-singing, all-dancing picture to be made. Rio Rita followed immediately.

"I don't know what I'll do next. I suppose something will come along. It always has."

And I ask you, why wouldn't it? He just has everything! Life for him is just one grand sweet song.

It Might be Lon Chaney!

IT WAS at one of Estelle Taylor's famous luncheons. As the cream puffs were prodded with forks, delighted little feminine shrieks were heard. In each and every one was a colored hanky, large and chiffon, in the new mode.

"Whatever gave you the idea, Estelle?" one of her guests said.

"Oh, I don't know. I was eating one the other night, and I thought of all the things that could be hidden in them," pausing pensively. "Notes and jewelry and candy . . . and cockroaches."

So This is Hollywood!

The colony has been anxiously awaiting the announcement as to what Griffith would do and it came as a complete surprise.

Schenck said the picture will be an epic and that Griffith has been given carte blanc financially and every other way. Griffith was born in Kentucky and has always been a student on works of Lincoln. For ten years, he said, he has wanted to film such an epic but felt it was too big a subject for the silent drama. He will make the picture of the man and will not attempt to weave story or plot into it.

"I consider it a sacred duty in filming this picture as Lincoln was the ideal American," Griffith stated.

How to Keep Cool

WHEW," said Ricardo Cortez, "it's hot! This is one of the days when one would like to take off his skin and just sit around in his bones and fan himself."

Temperamental Rainbow

SHADES of Hollywood!

Who would ever think it would come to that? But it has.

The Pathé studios have discovered that actresses do better work in one color than another. So, although the photographic results are still tones of black, grey and white, gowns are made in colors which best suit the temperament of the screen stars.

A Movie Miracle

ONE of Hollywood's latest amusements has been watching the spectacle of James Cruze directing Eric Von Stroheim in The Great Gabbo. As everyone knows, both are highly inflammable personalities, and it is certainly to the credit of both that the picture has been completed without mishap. The nearest approach to pyrotechnics occurred one day when discussion arose as to the method of Von's stuffing a large handkerchief into his mouth. It was a very hot day, and the nerves of the whole crew were on edge. The handkerchief was large, and Von, as the ventriloquist, was supposed to stuff the whole thing into his mouth. It was a difficult task, and the company was kept waiting many moments while Von labored with the cloth. Cruze suggested tearing off a piece and going through the entire scene with the smaller portion, but Von would hear of no such thing. The whole troupe watched with bated breath, but Cruze contained himself, waited on Von, and the crisis was passed.

Stepin Fetchit Explains

REPORTED chatter between John Barrymore and Stepin Fetchit, who, as we have said before, is our favorite cinema shadow. It seems the Barrymore car broke down on the way to the studio and along came a distinguished limousine driven by a cheerful gent of darker hue. Barrymore hailed him.

"My car broke down," quoth Barrymore. "I wonder if you would be good enough to take me to the studio."

"Certainly, Mist' Barrymore," replied the dark gentleman.

At the studio Barrymore handed him $2.00. "Thank you," he remarked in passing.

"Ah—Ah doan' want that, Mist' Barrymore. It was a pleasure."

"Oh, come—come, now," answered Barrymore.

"No, sah. You see, I'se in the perfession, too."

"Yes? Well—that's very fine. Suppose you come to the studio some day and take a test for a part in one of my pictures?"

"Well, Ah couldn' do that, Mist' Barrymore."

"No?"

"No, sah. You see Ah gits $700 a week and has got three of these cahs."

"Yes?"

"Yes, sah. I'se Stepin Fetchit, Ah is."

Ta da!

Doughty Dot

THE last night of "shooting" on her picture, The Great Divide, Dorothy Mackaill slipped on a log in the Verdugo Woodlands and sprained her ankle.

Director William Seiter immediately turned powerful electric lights on the injured member and succeeded in keeping down the swelling until she could complete her work. Her leading man, Sidney Blackmer, had to hold her up in some of the final scenes.

Dorothy was forced to go about on crutches for two weeks after the accident.

Ten Best Directors

ACCORDING to The Film Daily annual poll, Ernst Lubitsch, George Fitzmaurice, Frank Borzage, Cecil B. de Mille, F. W. Murnau, William Wellman, Clarence Brown, Raoul Walsh, Lloyd Bacon and Frank Lloyd have been chosen as the ten best directors of 1928-1929. Participating in the poll were 304 critics, representing 350 fan, trade and daily newspapers in 45 states, the District of Columbia and Canada.

The results of the poll ranked Lubitsch first with 171 votes. The other votes were distributed as follows: Fitzmaurice, 161; Borzage, 128; de Mille, 126; Murnau, 109; Wellman, 108; Brown, 104; Walsh, 103; Bacon, 95; and Lloyd, 87.

Embarrassed

BERNICE CLAIRE and Alexander Gray, newcomers to the screen from the stage, sang and played intimate love scenes together for many months in the stage production of The Desert Song.

But when they made their first love sequence together for No, No, Nanette, in which they are working for First National, Miss Claire became so embarrassed at the peeping cameras, that she started to laugh, stopping the picture until she could regain her composure.

Wardrobe Antiques

IT SEEMS that some years ago, there was a rather quaint custom of wearing under a dress, a garment called a petticoat. This garment was of bright material and usually ruffled. It showed slightly when milady took a step.

With this meager information, the wardrobe department of Warner Brothers studio, made a thousand such garments to be used in Under a Texas Moon. They were issued to the extra girls with printed instructions as to their purpose and how to wear them.

This Ain't No Bull!

CHARLIE CHAPLIN seems to be interested in Spain in a cinema way since he has sent Harry D'Arrast there with $200,000, a camera and sound equipment to catch the roars of the bulls and the shouts of the spectators.

Charlie certainly MUST be VERY interested when he sends the two hundred grand.

Twenty and Out

WILLIAM LE BARON has signed up sixteen girls all sixteen years of age. He calls them The Sixteen Sweet Sixteens. Next year he will add one more and call them The Seventeen Sweet Seventeens.

"By the time they are twenty," says Mr. LeBaron, "I am in hopes they will all have developed into stars and I shall then organize another chorus of Sweet Sixteens.

Irish Lips are Laughing

BARRY NORTON, Fox leading man, recently received a warm invitation to become an associate of the Irrepressible Sons of Free Ireland. In his letter to Barry, the president of the organization said:

"We make this suggestion, because, while you may have been born in the United States, we feel certain from your name that the blood of old Erin flows in your veins."

All of which would have fired Barry with enthusiasm but for the fact that the blood of old Buenos Aires, Argentina, flows through his veins and his real name is Alfredo de Biraben.

Helpful Boys

AN ACTRESS was made up, passing Moran and Mack. Moran stared at her, then said: "Look at that girl. Don't you think her mascara is too heavy?"

"Well," said Mack, "maybe we ought to help her carry it."

KLEENEX

CLEANSING TISSUES

rub cold cream off, not in

STOP using germ-covered cold cream cloths to remove cold cream. They spread dirt, germs, infection. Stop using towels. Creams, oil, constant laundering, all ruin face towels. Kleenex cleansing tissues make such practices extravagant.

Now, there's a time-saving, money-saving new package for Kleenex. It comes out two sheets together. You use them once—remove cold cream thoroughly, safely—then discard the Kleenex.

Send right now for a sample. Learn what it's like. You'll never again be without it. Get a box today at any drug or department store. See for yourself! Or fill in the attached coupon and get a sample packet.

Think of it—you can lose a half a pound a day or more safely without tiresome exercise—without wearing yourself out—without depriving yourself of tasty, delightful dishes that you always enjoy. A discovery called TAKOFF, which is the prescription of a well known physician, is now put up in convenient form so that everyone, regardless of where they live, can benefit. TAKOFF is not a dangerous drug. On the other hand it is a harmless vegetable compound that speedily corrects and adjusts digestive disorders and arouses the all important food assimilation fluids to uniform activity. No matter if you are five or fifty pounds over weight—whether the fat is on your arms, face, legs or stomach, whether you are man or woman, TAKOFF accomplishes the reduction pleasantly and safely. From your very first day treatment you will notice a feeling of better health, more ambition and energy, because you will begin to lose from the very start.

TAKOFF Is Safe—

Contains No Dangerous Thyroid

Unlike many other reducers, TAKOFF is remarkable, inasmuch as it does not contain any dangerous thyroid whatsoever—nor does it contain any other harmful substance. It is really nature's own aid for the obese—it can't harm you and it must help or your money back.

How to Order

While TAKOFF has been recommended and used for many years by the physician who discovered this magical formula, it is only a few months since it is available to everyone. Heretofore it could only be had at a fancy price by a limited few who lived at Hollywood, California, the home of this doctor. Now anyone who is sincere and ambitious to take off weight safely and without diet or exercise, can secure a 9-day treatment which is generally enough to reduce 5 to 8 pounds for the small sum of $2.00. Send no money now—just sign your name and address to the coupon below and you will receive your 9-day TAKOFF treatment in plain wrapper by return mail. When it arrives, pay the postman only $2.00 plus the few cents postage.

GUARANTEE $10,000.00 IN CASH GIVEN TO ANYONE PROVING THAT TAKOFF CONTAINS THYROID OR ANY OTHER HARMFUL SUBSTANCE.

Jolts on the Road to Fame

"Yeow," yelled Gilbert, continuing his hopping.

The seat of his pants was on fire!

The embryo actor retired from the scene after he had ruined many feet of film but he'd had his start—a bit humiliating, but wholesome.

Heaven only knows how many actors have taken their humiliating starts and immediately quit because they were asked to do things which they considered beneath their dignity. No occupation in the world demands such strange things of its beginners. Yet when there is real determination back of the desire to act, some go to almost any extreme to make good.

THERE is Eddie Nugent, for example. Eddie couldn't even get in the studio to ask for a job. He had done stunts for some of the minor companies, but he wanted a start at acting in one of the major plants. He invented all manner of excuses to get inside the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot, but none of them worked.

"I'm goin' to make it, somehow," he said to himself. "I've just got to get in."

So the young man decided to forget his dignity for once at least. He stealthily crept along the side of the tall back fence and, assuring himself that no one was watching, clambered over. He dropped to the ground behind one of the barn-like stages and ran. In a few moments he was mingling with a crowd of "extras" and getting his bearings. After a bit he detached himself and boldly entered the "prop" department.

"Can I get a job in here?" he asked.

"How'd you get in?" the superintendent asked.

"Never mind that! Can I get a job?"

An active, likeable chap with a ready smile, the chief took to him immediately. And he did need another hand in his department. Eddie got the job. His entry had been somewhat humiliating, but it was wholesome. It led the way to employment as a gag man and then to a good part in Our Dancing Daughters and eventually a contract. And he came in by way of the back fence!

WHILE Eddie Nugent made his entrance by stealth, Dick Arlen hurled himself in. Eddie was cautious, Arlen abrupt. Dick was delivering films for a laboratory, and riding a motorcycle. One day his machine skidded right at the door of the Paramount studio and Richard went hurtling in, head first.

"Here I am!" he shouted as he bumped along the paving.

They picked the bruised and bleeding young man up and carried him into the hospital to have the abrasions dressed. When he returned to the laboratory he was fired.

"All right," said Dick. "Thanks!" Back to Paramount he went.

"I'm the fellow who came in headfirst yesterday," he said. "I lost my job for it. I'd like to get another."

As much through a feeling of sympathy as anything else, they took him on and presently he was all dressed up as an extra. That was his start toward stellar rôles. He made good with a bang.

IN MY opinion, Nick Stuart, the rising young actor with Fox, had the most humiliating experience of all when he got his initial chance in pictures. Nick was working in Los Angeles as a shipping clerk when he made up his mind to crash the gates. The arms and ammunition store which employed him, agreed, in response to his very earnest entreaties, to let him deliver a brace of revolvers which Tom Mix recently had ordered. Once inside the gates and his errand completed, Nick headed for the casting office and stood before Lew Seiler.

"I'd like to get a job in pictures, sir," he said.

"What can you do?" asked Seiler.

"Anything."

"Can you fight?"

"Oh, yes sir! I can fight very well."

"All right, come here tomorrow morning. I've got a bit you can do. I want you to fight—a girl."

"Huh?" queried the startled young actor, "fight a girl?"

"Yes."

"B-b-but I wouldn't like to fight a girl. Isn't there—couldn't you, somehow or other, make it a boy?"

"Nope!"

YOUNG Stuart decided quickly. If fighting a girl was his only chance to get a start, he'd do it, humiliating though it would be. But he didn't know the half of it. When he got into greasepaint next day and was taken in a bus to a park in Pasadena, he learned the rest.

"You are to walk down a path with two other boys," the director told him, "and you will pass Shirley Mason, who will be dressed as a boy. You make some crack about her dog and Shirley lights into all three of you. You start to run and the dog chases you and tears out the seat of your pants. While you're trying to get rid of the dog, Shirley catches up with you, knocks you down, sits on your neck and whales the tar out of you. You're to hit at her, but be careful that you don't hit her. All right now, get ready."

Nick looked at the bulldog and felt of his pants. He was in for it. The dog was shown where it was to grab—and how.

"Camera!" called the director.

During the next three minutes, young Stuart had one of the liveliest times of

GROW—

Yes, Grow Eyelashes and Eyebrows like this in 30 days

THE most marvelous discovery has been made—a way to make eyelashes and eyebrows actually grow. Now if you want long, curling, silken lashes, you can have them—and beautiful, wonderful eyebrows.

I say to you in plain English that no matter how scant the eyelashes and eyebrows, I will increase their length and thickness in 30 days—or not accept a single penny. No "ifs," "ands," or "maybes." It is new growth, startling results, or no pay. And you are the sole judge.

Proved Beyond the Shadow of a Doubt

Over ten thousand women have tried my amazing discovery, proved that eyes can now be fringed with long, curling natural lashes, and the eyebrows made intense, strong silken lines! Read what a few of them say. I have made oath before a notary public that these letters are voluntary and genuine. From Mlle. Heffelfinger, 240 W. "B" St., Carlisle, Pa.: "I certainly am delighted . . . I notice the greatest difference . . . people I come in contact with remark how long and silky my eyelashes appear." From Naomi Otstot, 5437 Westminster Ave., W. Phila., Pa.: "I am greatly pleased. My eyebrows and lashes are beautiful now." From Frances Raviart, R. D. No. 2, Box 179, Jeanette, Penn.: "Your eyelash and eyebrow beautifier is simply marvelous." From Pearl Provo, 2954 Taylor St., N. E., Minneapolis, Minn.: "I have been using your eyebrow and eyelash Method. It is surely wonderful." From Miss Flora J. Corriveau, 8 Pinette Ave., Biddeford, Me.: "I am more than pleased with your Method. My eyelashes are growing long and luxurious."

Results Noticeable in a Week

In one week—sometimes in a day or two—you notice the effect. The eyelashes become more beautiful—like a silken fringe. The darling little upward curl shows itself. The eyebrows become sleek and tractable—with a noticeable appearance of growth and thickness. You will have the thrill of a lifetime—know that you can have eyelashes and eyebrows as beautiful as any you ever saw.

Remember . . . in 30 days I guarantee results that will not only delight, but amaze. If you are not absolutely and entirely satisfied, your money will be returned promptly. I mean just that—no quibble, no strings. Introductory price $1.95. Later the price will be regularly $5.00.

Blind Youth

MIKE, who was Twenty-one years old, lived on The Flying U Ranch In Old Arizona, with his Mother and Old Dad, who was The Country Doctor. He was Stage Struck and got the Broadway Fever and decided to go to The Big City, New York. So he caught The Overland Limited, after telling his girl Geraldine, just Sweet Sixteen, good-bye. The Last Warning of his Mother Machree was, "Don't Marry A Woman of the World!"

On Broadway he became The Jazz Singer at a Cabaret and soon had Money to Burn. Going The Way of All Flesh, he started Running Wild and began The Pace That Thrills. On New Year's Eve, he met Stella Dallas, Queen of the Night Clubs, one of the Women They Talk About, who wore Fine Clothes, Rolled Stockings, Kid Boots, had Bobbed Hair, lots of It, and whose Smiling Irish Eyes had The World at Her Feet.

She took him to a Speakeasy, Just Off Broadway, run by The Mysterious Dr. Fu Manchu and patronized by Girls Who Dare to be Not Quite Decent, After Midnight, While the City Sleeps.

The Red Wine and Bright Lights went to his head and The Singing Fool played The Dummy and stayed All Night Up In Mabel's Room with The Siren, using the latest Fashions in Love in telling her of his Love, Adoration and Infatuation for her.

The Awakening came at Sunrise and The Sap realized he was Headin' For Danger. So when The Temptress said, "Let's Get Married, leaving as soon as A Ship Comes In, for a Honeymoon Abroad," knowing she was a Lady of the Pavements, her Object, Alimony, he replied, "For the Love of Mike, Must We Marry?"

FOR Three Hours, The Outcast let loose an Avalanche of words Not For Publication. She said, "Women Love Diamonds and Oh Baby! if you Don't Come Across with money, my friends, The Gentlemen of the Press, will be Telling the World of my Betrayal, in The First Edition. I may not be The Angel of Broadway, but you can't High Hat me. I'm The Lone Wolf's Daughter and when The Lone Wolf Returns, his Fury will have all the Chicago Underworld on you."

He was All at Sea. He was Lonesome and Homesick and began to think The Only Way out was to go down to the Waterfront and jump into The River. Then he got The Letter from one of his Brothers, telling him Mother O'Mine wanted him to be Rolling Home to The Old Homestead soon or My Best Girl would be The Girl Who Wouldn't Wait.

Back in The Heart of the Hills, he said, "Dearie, It Must Be Love." So he borrowed Skinner's Dress Suit, took Two Weeks Off and they were married.

He was a Lucky Boy for The Escape he made from The Lost World of Man, Woman and Sin.

That Mother Knows Best is Nothing But the Truth.

his life. When Shirley went into action, she did her best. She lit into the trio of young men, the bulldog swung onto the seat of Nick's pants as he fled, then Miss Mason arrived and swung on his jaw. After which she sat upon him and completed her job.

"Lord," Nick said to me the other day, "Shirley packs a wallop in that right fist!"

Many persons likely will recall seeing that fight in The Little Wanderer. Humiliating it was to Nick, but wholesome, because the Fox Company now is starring him with Sue Carol.

"ANYTHING to get a start" seems to be the slogan. It will be remembered that Harold Lloyd couldn't get into the Universal studio until he joined a gang of extras one day at the lunch hour and tramped through the gate with them. Lon Chaney, unable to get employment, made up as a Chinaman when he heard that Tod Browning was vainly seeking a certain type of Oriental.

"You're hired!" Browning said promptly when he looked at the man who now is accredited with having "a thousand faces."

Eddie Phillips adopted a similar course when he learned that Mary Pickford was searching for an Italian type to play a rôle in one of her pictures. Reginald Denny fought his way through a half dozen of The Leather Pushers series to get his start.

To this list might be added a monkey which got a part in Noah's Ark. The little simian refused to stay on the perch provided for him in Noah's sea-going liner. Off he would hop, only to be recaptured and put back again. Finally, he hopped onto a red-hot flood lamp and sat down—for just one brief moment. He let out a screech which echoed throughout all the Ark and then was off and away.

He got his start in pictures.

Humiliating, yes! But not very wholesome.

eighteen-day diet for me!" cried he, selecting a huge turkey leg, embellished with a mound of potato salad, and all that goes with a meal of this kind.

BRILLIANT was the garden party sponsored by Mr. and Mrs. John Robertson at their attractive home in Beverly Hills. A dining room was erected outdoors for the occasion, decorated in a striking color scheme of orange and black, with modernistic designs. An orchestra furnished the music for dancing and bridge tables were arranged in cool corners.

Among those bidden were Messrs. and Mesdames Richard Barthelmess, John Gilbert (Ina Claire), Rod La Rocque (Vilma Banky), Henry King, Louis B. Mayer, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., (Joan Crawford), Robert Fairbanks, Antonio Moreno, Edmund Lowe (Lilyan Tashman), Harry Rapf, Irving Thalberg) Norma Shearer), Benjamin Glazer and Harry Beaumont; the Misses Dorothy Mackaill, Bessie Love, Polly Moran, Marie Dressler, Hedda Hopper, Aileen Pringle and Dorothy Sebastian; Count Andres de Segurola, William Powell, Ronald Colman, Charlie Chaplin, Clarence Brown, Harry Crocker and Jack Cummings.

MORE than one hundred guests were entertained by Mr. and Mrs Jesse Lasky at an elaborately appointed dinner dance. Two orchestras furnished the music for dancing, and during the evening, impromptu numbers were given by Ann Pennington, Dennis King and Helen Kane. Numbered among the celebrated guests were the Louis B. Mayers and their charming daughteres Irene and Edith, Mr. and Mrs. B. P. Schulberg, Mr. and Mrs. Irving Thalberg (Norma Shearer), the Joseph Von Sternbergs, Kay Francis, the George Bancrofts, Mr. and Mrs. John Monk Saunders (Fay Wray) and the Neil Hamiltons.

THE Toluca Lake Home of Joby and Dick (Mr. and Mrs. Richard Arlen) was the setting for an informal bridge supper one Sunday evening recently. Honoring the self-styled mayor of Toluca Lake were Virginia Valli, Kay Francis, Charles Farrell, Gary Cooper, Lupe Velez, William Powell, William Boyd (stage actor), Walter Huston and Mr. and Mrs. William Wellman.

A COMBINATION swimming, luncheon and tennis party was sponsored by Bebe Daniels at her beach home for Bessie Love, Beatrice Lillie, Marie Mosquini, Alma Tell, Mrs. Phyllis Daniels, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hobart, Mr. and Mrs. Irving Willat (Billie Dove), George O'Brien, Charles Farrell, Roland Drew, Howard Hughes, William Hawkes, Hoot Gibson and Albert Hall. Oh, yes, and Ben Lyon, of course!

Captain George K. Home and Captain Herman Cline of the Los Angeles police department, at the preliminary investigation in the shooting of the Denver millionaire, Courtland Dines, by Mabel Normand's chauffeur, Horace A. Greer, on New Year's Eve, 1923, another sad episode in Mabel's career.

The Tragic Life Story of Mabel Normand

stood around the scenery and rubbered at her. The management tactfully suggested that Mabel find some other kind of entertainment. Mabel insisted that she had to look at something and she didn't know where else to look. Whereupon all the Farrar sets were boxed in like a national bank vault. The world went very well, then—until it was discovered that Mabel was peeking through a knot hole. The knot hole was plugged up. One day Miss Farrar heard a noise that seemed to come from above. She glanced up to see that that terrible infant had shinned up a balcony and was looking down at her from the roof.

IF MABEL had thrown her money around before, she poured it out in floods now. Every rag tag in Hollywood who could think of a sob story touched Mabel.

In the middle of her engagement she made a little trip to Paris which is still historic. One of the Paris dress makers sold her a gold gown for $10,000; she bought enough jewelry to stock a store. Mabel still has one of the most marvelous collections of gems in the world.

When she came from Paris—having paid all the expenses of her girl playmates, she told what a grand time she had had. This made some of her other girl friends feel so sad and neglected that Mabel took the next boat back to show them a good time, too. Returning from this trip, she encountered another sad and neglected coterie on the dock and took the next boat for the third time. Altogether, those trips set Mabel back $250,000.

Her Goldwyn pictures were not very successful. They were just pictures. Mabel was always essentially a comédienne and the art of comedy making is a very special talent. The Goldwyn studio just wasn't equipped for the job.

In the end, she drifted back to Sennett's—I believe on an arrangement with Goldwyn. In rapid succession she made three of the greatest comedies of her career—Molly-O, Suzanna and The Extra Girl.

Suzanna was such a knock-out that Mary Pickford offered Sennett $50,000 for the story and tried to persuade him to take a vacation from his own studio and direct her in a picture. Mary told me she would rather have had Mabel Normand's work in that picture to her credit than anything else she had ever seen on the screen.

PROVIDENCE at this time evidently decided that Mabel had been licking the buttered side of the bread about long enough. Down on her head came a series of the most singular misfortunes that ever befell a star.

She had a personal quarrel with Mack Sennett that, I think, broke her heart. I think that Mabel had always loved this big handsome Irishman.

For two years, then, she lived almost the life of a recluse. She had a woman companion who was half maid and half pal. Mabel read and wrote. I have seen some of her poetry. It has a remarkable quality. None of it has ever been printed. She keeps it in a locked book.

THE day that William Desmond Taylor was murdered, Mabel woke up to find herself the heroine of an international love episode.

I have among my papers a memorandum of Mabel's own account of her affair with Taylor. It gives a breezy idea of the way Mabel talks: "Well," she said, "it seems like Mr. Taylor was the odd man when we went to parties and I was the odd girl going around with a married crowd—Ruth Roland, Henry King and a lot of married couples.

"A lot of people thought Taylor was very fond of me and that I didn't return it. Then they decided that we were engaged; then they made up their minds that I wasn't very nice to him and that we had quarreled.

"I never had any quarrel with him—except for instance when we were at a party or something and I would run away and pay attention to a lot of other people. Bill would say, when we were going home, that I didn't treat him nicely. And I would say: 'For God's sake, why do you stand around with that trick dignity of yours? You make me sick.'

"Bill would say: 'Good God, don't you know I love you?'

"And I would say: 'Well, then, for God's sake, don't be melodramatic about it.'"

MABEL was the last person to see Taylor alive. She had come to his apartment to get a book. He gave her the book: they talked for a few moments; then he took her to her limousine. He was next seen dead on his dining room floor.

Mabel was examined and cross-examined by the detectives. She insisted that she knew nothing about the murder. She was such a delicious morsel for gossip that the papers couldn't let her alone. In spite of some letters that Mabel was very anxious to get back and which were afterward found in the murdered man's riding boots, I think that it was never a serious love affair.

Every other person connected with the affair was allowed to forget it; but some one was continually dragging the ghost of Taylor out and parading it before her.

Years afterward, a district attorney, anxious for publicity, whooped it up again and dragged Mabel back in—when she had finally struggled back to another start in motion pictures.

"Say," she said, "if I have to repeat this again, I am going to set it to music to relieve the monotony. I've already committed it to memory."

Mabel passed off the situation with gay courage, but it hurt. I have never seen a girl so crushed and humiliated.

Mabel was ill for a long time after the Taylor murder case. Her health had been failing for a long time. All this worry—these sleepless nights—didn't help. Her picture career seemed

"When I Was Fat

—and heavy, I felt ashamed to dance,
My friends then called me 'fatty,'
With love I had no chance!
But Collipaste reduced my waist,
My legs and double chin—so,
Now they call me 'sweetheart'
Just because I'm slim!"

AND HERE'S HOW SHE REDUCED
Without Drugs — Without Dieting — Without Sweat Baths—Without Exercising, Etc.!

Millions of overstout, fat hips, double chins, bulky arms and protruding busts, thick-looking legs and ankles will soon disappear, thanks to the discovery of "COLLIPASTE," which you rub into any fat parts, as you would a cream, yet it is not a cream and does not contain a drop of water.

COLLIPASTE actually penetrates! It goes right in and creates heat, thereby bringing oxygen into contact with the fatty tissues. Fat then separates and passes out through pores with excreted moisture. The parts are thus reduced in size and weight, the flesh made firm and normal, the skin clear, smooth and beautiful, pleasantly and harmlessly.

Slenderizing the figure this new, easy way is meeting with hearty approval by physicians who warn against dangerous internal drugs. The success of COLLIPASTE will surely revolutionize methods of reducing, because it reduces the parts you wish to reduce, and is pleasant and healthful to use, at night, and it works while you sleep!

MANY REPORTING ASTONISHING RESULTS

Miss Caryl Bergman, beautiful dancing star in Ziegfield's latest Broadway success, "Rosalie," writes: "I find Collipaste very beneficial to both the skin and muscles of my limbs. It seems to give strength to the muscles and is splendid for reducing any fatty parts."

Mrs. E. H. Young, Zanesville, O., writes: "I have used one jar and have lost six pounds in two weeks."

Miss Mazera Newbille, West Phila., Pa., writes: "I am well pleased with Collipaste."

Miss A. B. writes: "I have lost six pounds in two weeks. It really reduces the parts you use it on. I started reducing my hips and stomach and already feel like a new person."

Mrs. J. H. Lemmerman, New York City, writes: "I am very satisfied with the first jar of Collipaste."

Mrs. A. T. writes: "Am much pleased with results; dropped seven pounds in ten days."

Therefore, every overstout person should get a jar now and take away those ugly fatty, burdensome parts.

to have faded away. Her finances were in a terrible condition. It looked like seventeen kinds of ruin were staring her in the face.

ONE thing about Mabel though; some one always seems to arrive with a net when she is falling. In this case it was an attorney—Claude I. Parker and his brother, Ivan Parker. Some of Mabel's most devoted friends are professional men of highest standing.

I imagine that no attorney ever tackled a more terrible mess than Mabel's finances. In her safety deposit box he found pay checks that had lain for years without being cashed. Her check book looked like the daily record of a charity institution. Checks for $1,000—checks for $3,500—$2,000—$2,500 . . . to people she scarcely knew.

By main strength and violence, her attorney would drag Mabel into his office and she would sit like a guilty, naughty little girl while he went over her check stubs.

"Now," he would say, "why in the name of the seven hinges of hell did you give that woman $4,000?"

"Oh, Mrs. Thingamobob—whatever her name is . . ." Mabel would say. "Sure I gave her the money."

"But why?" thundered the exasperated lawyer.

"Why, she needed it," answered Mabel—as though that were final and satisfactory.

Mr. Parker told me that—in spite of her scatter-brain method of making ducks and drakes out of good money—Mabel's memory is so extraordinary that she could remember every check she had written. Her mind is like a dictograph record.

SHE was finally straightened out financially. She now keeps her returned checks pinned to the stubs. A trust fund of $50,000 has been set apart for the care and protection of her mother and Mabel herself is safely enjoying a good, sound income that is safe from all the sob sisters with itching palms. When they found they had to tell their driveling stories to a lawyer with thin tight lips, they faded away. Most of their undying friendship for Mabel also faded. One of her tragedies has been the ingratitude of the people for whom she has sacrificed herself.

About two years after the Taylor murder, another tragedy came slamming down out of a clear sky and all but destroyed Mabel. She was as much to blame for it as she was for the whale that swallowed Jonah.

It was a curious story. A love sick boy who had adored her from afar had finally gotten into her life as a chauffeur, to be near her. In the innocence of her heart, Mabel never dreamed that this quiet, subdued, polite young boy in chauffeur's uniform was wildly, passionately in love with her.

His name was Horace A. Greer. Probably that was not his real name. It is known that he was also called Joe Kelly. A rather mysterious young fellow. It was said after the tragedy that he was the son of a rich family in the east. He had, however, worked as a chauffeur for Charles Ray and one of the Spauldings.

It was the last day of 1923. Mabel was very ill. She was going to the hospital the next day to be operated on for appendicitis. But after all, New Year's night was New Year's night with Mabel.

EDNA PURVIANCE telephoned her to come over to her house on Vermont avenue. "Court" was there. "Court" was Courtland Dines, a young millionaire from Denver who was a Hollywood beau at the moment.

Greer drove her over and left her at the door.

"Come on, you dirty dogs," said Mabel, bursting into Edna's house. "Step into your dance and let's go somewhere."

Mr. Dines, however, didn't want to go somewhere.

Greer, the chauffeur, went back to Mabel's house. He worked around the house taking down Mabel's Christmas tree. Mabel's secretary and companion telephoned her at Edna's house. She told Mr. Dines, who came to the phone, that Mabel ought to come home; that she was ill and had to go to the hospital the next day. "Oh, it's early yet," said Dines airily; "send over my Christmas package." Mabel had forgotten to bring his present.

The secretary put her hand over the telephone and said to Greer, "He won't let her come home. He won't let her leave the house." Quietly, grimly, Greer said that he would take over Mr. Dines' Christmas present; and went out to the car.

Let Mabel tell the rest of the story:

JOE," she said, (she always called him Joe, although his name was Horace) "came in and he had the Christmas package. I noticed nothing unusual about him. I left the room. I went into Edna's room. She had her evening gown on, but it wasn't hooked up yet. I didn't want the chauffeur to see Edna with her gown unhooked so I went in and said to Edna: 'Say, you dirty dog, where's your powder puff?'

"Then all of a sudden I heard those terrible things. I thought they were fire crackers. I used to throw fire crackers at Ben Turpin—poor old Ben—all the time at the Sennett Company, until he threatened to quit his job. That's what I thought they were—fire crackers. They were popping all over the house."

But they weren't fire crackers. The young chauffeur had asked Mabel to come home and Dines had sneered at his anxious devotion. Greer had drawn a revolver and fired bullets into Dines until the revolver jammed. Then he drove to the police station and gave himself up.

Dines did not die—but Mabel did. She died a thousand deaths. No one will ever know what she went through. Edna Purviance is a slow, quiet, self-contained girl. She had nothing to say to the reporters, so she escaped. Mabel could not help being good copy. Every reporter who worked on the case adored Mabel and would have strangled himself with his own hands to have helped her; but they wrecked her.

It just happened to be one of those times when Hollywood was looking for a chance to be shocked. The women's clubs felt like passing resolutions against somebody; so they passed them about Mabel. Why they picked on Mabel is a mystery. It was a furious scandal. Mabel was the only one who was not to blame in any remote way, so naturally she was made the goat. It just about finished her screen career.

ABOUT three years ago, Mabel tried another timid venture in pictures. Hal Roach of the Roach Comedies collided with an inspiration. He would bring back some of the old-time stars in his comedies. He signed Theda Bara and Mabel Normand and several others. It was an unfortunate adventure. None of them got to first base. When they got them in the pictures, nobody knew what to do with them. So Mabel surrendered her screen career with a sigh.

Not long after that, Hollywood spilled over the coffee cups in the morning in their astonishment at what they read in the morning paper. Mabel had gone up the coast with a gay automobile party and had come back a married lady. Her husband was her old school mate, Lew Cody—who in Mickey had been the villain who pursued her.

Sudden? Yes, it was sudden. But that does not mean it was not a decision well thought out. When Mabel and Lew started on a trip to Ventura with a gay party they apparently had about as much intention of trying to swim to China as they had of being married. But Mabel's decisions are lightning flashes.

Her honeymoon was as characteristically "Mabel" as her bag of peanuts and her Atlantic Monthly. She didn't like Lew's mansion in Beverly Hills; anyhow, it was too much trouble to move her clothes; so she lived in her house and he lived in his house and occasionally they went to call on each other. Lately, however, they moved in Lew's house.

MUCH of the time since their marriage, they have been separated by circumstances. Lew went into vaudeville and has been on the road almost continuously. Both he and Mabel have been ill a great deal. One time last winter when she was ill in a hospital in Altadena with her life despaired of, Lew was almost as ill in Chicago. All they could do was send each other telegrams.

They go out very little socially, on account of Mabel's health; but they are most in demand of any married couple in Hollywood. Lew, in fact, is almost a professional dinner guest. I dare say that he is invited to two-thirds of the public banquets given in Hollywood. He is the most brilliant after-dinner speaker I have ever heard. And that goes even for Will Rogers.

MABEL would be a riot socially if if she had the slightest interest in it—with her beauty, her charm and her scintillant brains. I would give a good deal to hear Lew and Mabel both going at once as I used to hear them in the old days.

Since her marriage, little has been heard of Mabel. She lives in Beverly Hills, the motion picture suburb of Los Angeles. Sometimes she goes out to parties. She reads a lot, writes a lot, and hides her writings in a locked book.

Twice during the last few years her life has been despaired of. She says it is "just a cold." Her beautiful body is sadly wasted, but her spirit is aflame as ever. She is just as inquisitive, as eager and as keen as ever. But sometimes the Mabel that nobody knows has her hours of sorrow and despair.

I have a letter from Mabel that I treasure dearly because it is a side of Mabel that very few know—the sincere, sorrowful, sweet child underneath the reckless little tomboy who throws firecrackers at the actors. It reads:

"Dear Harry:

"Somehow or other tonight I am in a very lonely mood, so I am going to write you of something that I have always intended telling you when we should meet, but I have decided that it is very selfish of me to keep it any longer.

"A very dear friend of mine who knows you personally and who has always been one of my most loyal and staunchest friends—something, Harry, that one cannot buy—to whom I have gone with my many troubles, because you know unhappiness makes sensitive people cowardly—and whom I have never left without some encouragement and solace . . ." (She goes on to tell me of a hidden kindness done me by a very eminent lawyer—a kindly deed of which I had never been conscious. She wanted me to know it—that I should ever more deeply appreciate his friendship.)

YOU know, Harry," she continues, "there is a mystic power in the ties which friendship throws around the human heart and I am sure he is one of your truest and most loyal friends.

"Shall we call him the judge?—and I will leave you to guess the rest.

"Give my regards to Mrs. Carr and the family and this will be a secret just between you and me and I am happier now than when I began to write this letter.

"Ever your friend,
"Mabel Normand."

I know Mabel—all her faults and her failings and her golden virtues . . . and her great heart and her great soul—and I am proud of her friendship as I have been proud of the friendship of few men or women.

She is a great actress and a great woman.

behind me. It is very sad. It makes me feel very lonesome when I have seen him for only such a short time.

THEN, when I am only home for a very few days I get a cablegram. It is from Prince George on board his ship at Del Monte. It say: "Send your car and chauffeur to Del Monte to wait for me. I am coming to Hollywood to see you."

I am so excited. I send for my chauffeur right away and tell him how he must go to the shore by the ship and wait for Prince George. The Admiral he have strict orders from the King that Prince George is not to leave the ship. They have guard posted all around.

In the middle of the night Prince George come up out of his cabin, a coat drawn around his head so no one can see who he is, and climbs down the side to where he has a small boat waiting. He comes quietly to shore where my chauffeur is expecting him and they drive off for Hollywood.

In the meantime I have got a suite for him at the Roosevelt Hotel. We keep his coming a very big secret. Nobody knows the Prince is in town or there would be much excitement. That is what makes it great fun.

For three days we have the grand adventure. We are like two children out of school. We can—what you call—be ourselves. We go down to the amusement park at Venice like we used to do in Germany. We eat beeg hot dogs. We go for ride on the funny wagons on the roller coaster. We win the kewpie dolls. We dance in the public dance halls with all the clerks and working people. And the Prince is getting beeg keeck out of it, because nobody know that he is a Prince at all, and nobody bother him.

All the while we are having such a good time the police are out looking for us. The Admiral he have found out the Prince is gone. So he get in touch with the Los Angeles police and the secret service and they are looking for us everywhere while we are having good time at the amusement parks.

BY THIS time they have find out he is in Hollywood and they say he must come back to the ship. But first he say he want to go to the Hollywood party. The next day he go back to the ship.

The Admiral he is very angry. He have strict orders from the King he is to keep watch over the Prince. So soon after the Prince is gone, he write me a very sad letter. The fleet have sailed away. The Prince they have put in what they call the brig, which is like a jail on the ship and he must be there thirty days, all for his little holiday with Lily.

Just before I start work on my next picture, I hear again from Louis Ferdinand. He is well and strong again. He is Dr. Ferdinand now. He has just taken his degree as a doctor of philosophy at the University of Berlin. And what do you think? He is coming to this country to see Lily! I am very much excited to have him coming here. It will be very grand. But it is very hard to believe. I have to pinch myself to know it's true.

When he first come, we have a very gay time like the days when we were in Berlin together. All the people in Hollywood give parties for him. We go everywhere together. Then I must start rehearsing for The Cockeyed World, and I cannot see him so much.

FINALLY, he decide he too must go to work. His family have arranged with Mr. Henry Ford that he should work in the Ford factory from the bottom and learn the business. So he go to work in the Ford factory and work very hard, eight hours a day. Even if he is out late at night he must be up at six in the morning to go way downtown to work.

Nobody in the factory but Mr. Ford know who he is. He is simply Mr. Ferdinand to them, a laborer like everyone else.

One night he say to me, "Lily, I love you so much. Let us take an airplane right now and fly down to Agua Caliente, and get married!"

It is almost within my hands now. I cannot let it go. I ask my friends. I ask my lawyer. They tell me I can get married if I like to, but it will not do my career any good. So I make up my mind, the next day I tell Louis Ferdinand I am very sorry I cannot marry him. Oh, but it was very hard for me to do. If there had not always been that idea in my life of making the success, if it had not been for what my mother taught me when I was a very little girl, I could not ever have done it. But I had put love out of my life so often it was not so hard to do it again.

Then one day a very sad thing happen. It seems with love it is always like that. I am working at the studio out at Fox Hills on The Cockeyed World. There is a phone call in my dressing room. It is Louis Ferdinand. He is so excited I can hardly understand him.

LILY," he say, "I am leaving town in two hours. My family they have communicated with the ambassador. They do not want me in Hollywood any longer. So they have got Henry Ford to transfer me to his factory in the Argentine. You must come to the station right away. I must talk to you before I go."

I begin to cry. I feel so badly that he is to go and leave me. I go to Mr. Walsh the director and tell him Louis Ferdinand is leaving, that it may be months before I see him again, that I must see him right away.

Mr. Walsh shakes his head. He is very sorry. But he has very expensive

"Some day," says Lily Damita, "I hope I shall marry. Every woman should have the great love in her life, but if you have made up your mind to be the success, you cannot have love in your life until you have money and fame."

picture. He must turn it out in so many days. He cannot hold up a whole cast just for Lily.

I call Louis Ferdinand on the phone, but he is gone. I cannot reach him. He has gone to the station. I have never feel worse in my whole life. I sit in my dressing room, crying and crying. Then Mr. Walsh send for me. I must go back on the set now. I put my makeup on again. I cannot cry any more. It will spoil my makeup.

Meanwhile, down there at the station, Louis is walking up and down the platform. He is wild. The reporters try to talk to him and he roars at them. He wants to know, "Where is Lily? Why does she not come?" He does not know I must keep on with my work. Finally, the train pulls out and he gets on, still standing on the back platform, hoping still I will come, until the train is gone.

He tell me about it in a letter he writes on the train on the first day he is out. It makes me feel very sad. I get letters from him almost every day. He is very homesick and sad to leave Hollywood where he have made so many friends. It is hard for me, too, to have him gone like that. But now I can think only of my career.

SOME day I hope maybe I shall marry. Every woman should have the great love in her life. It is the greatest in living for a woman. But if you have made up your mind to be the success, you cannot have love in your life until you are ready for it, until you have the money and the fame and can take the time without its hurting your fight for success.

It is the success itself that I care for, not the things that it brings. The money? What is that? Good for to make yourself comfortable and beyond that it is a nuisance.

Always I have wanted to go back again to Paris. Just for a visit. Not to stay long. Always I get letters from my friends there. They say, "Lily, Paris is no longer the same without you. The portrait artists, they have no one to paint. There is no longer the picture of the beautiful actress to hang at the grand salons. At the Longchamps Races there is no longer the beauty to attract all eyes. Deauville, Biarritz, Monte Carlo, they are dead without you. Come back to us, please!"

So I have gone back to Paris for a visit. It is grand to see all the old friends, all the old places once more. But I do not want to stay. I want to work in America. I feel like American now. Whoopee! Hot dog! Do I not talk like American, too?

I want to make more pictures, the biggest pictures yet. And then I want to travel. I have never been to the Orient. I should like to go. I want to see what it is like in China.

Then, in two or three years more, when I am tired of the success, and would like something else, I can turn to love, maybe, and then get married. Who knows?

Now She Drives a Packard

JUNE COLLYER is the "poor little rich girl" of cinemaland. Her father is a wealthy New York attorney.

Ever since June drew her first film rôle she has insisted upon paying her own way. Three times her father has come West and found June driving a rattling, rusty motor car of ancient vintage.

On each visit he insisted that June either permit him to buy her a new car, or that she invest some of her own money in one. She refused to do either.

Unknown to June, he hired a garage mechanic to wind the old coupe around a sturdy telephone pole. Then he bought her a new Packard.

When June reads this she will cease worrying about her father's driving ability. He told her he had crashed the old car when he became confused in traffic. Neither does June know that the wrecking job cost Dad $35.

A corner of the elaborate motion picture exhibit recently conducted at Atlantic City, N. J., to inform the public of the outstanding progress and major points of interest in the film industry. At the right of the above picture is displayed a copy of SCREEN SECRETS attached to the original pastel portrait of Betty Compson, posed and executed for use on the cover page of the July, 1929, issue of SCREEN SECRETS.

Any Old Rags?

The reason was I had torn her heirloom! I had taken one of my famous comedy falls—one of those that wasn't in the script. Oh, I always do something like that. That's the way I got started in comedy. I walked by a cameraman's tripod, tripped and toppled the whole thing over. The director thought I was so funny he gave me a "bit."

ON ANOTHER occasion, we took a woman with us on a drive. She was a sweet soul and so appreciative of the scenery. In fact, she seemed to be quite overcome at the sight of the fields of flowers with butterflies flitting around. We stopped the car and this dear woman in her hopelessly old fashioned coat with its huge dolman sleeves got out and did a butterfly imitation over the flower field.

Yes, I wore the dolman coat in a First National comedy, flapping over a studio field of imitation flowers. The critics said it was funny, too.

Even my mother's wardrobe is not sacred when it comes to my perpetual search for new old clothes. Mother is past seventy and is the adorable type who still puts on her earrings before she takes off her night gown. Her alpaca skirts and delicate lace waists could not be duplicated by anyone in Hollywood. Mother is generous about turning over her wardrobe to me, too.

PEOPLE hear of my strange way of getting clothes for comedies and hardly a week goes by that something does not come through the mails. Then, when I go traveling, or even make a trip into town, I am always getting acquainted with people. The result of these contacts always seems to be more and funnier comedy clothes. Hal says if I were stranded on the Mojave desert, I would have found some one to talk to by the time the rescue party reached me!

I get a huge amount of enjoyment out of "shopping" for my wardrobe for a new picture. Other actresses go to the most exclusive shops and pick out their costumes, while, likely as not, I am peering into secondhand clothing stores or talking a near-stranger or a friend out of something.

One of my best friends said the other day: "When any of us sees Louise drive up to the house, we wonder whether she's come to pay a social call or to negotiate some of our clothing that she just knows will be a scream in her new comedy.

Ronald Colman's Dream Girl

play. She must be gentle and kindly toward all—and especially toward me."

RONALD does not approve of the out and out athletic type of girl.

"I should want the future Mrs. Colman to have a tendency toward outdoor sports without being given entirely over to them," he said. "A fondness for tennis or golf would be preferable to a craving for bridge. But please do not misunderstand. I do not want an old fashioned girl, but rather one who will give a little time and thought to our home and not spend all of her time gadding about hotels, cafés and homes of her friends in search of amusement."

Mr. Colman does not believe marriage should prevent a wife from continuing with her career, if she has one.

"If my wife worked before her marriage, she must not go on afterward, unless she does it for glory and not for monetary considerations.

SHOULD this girl I shall some day wed, have made a great name for herself in her chosen profession, regardless of what it is, and should she want to continue to maintain that name, all well and good. But I have wealth enough to provide for my wife's needs and to have her continue to work solely for the purpose of having an independent income would be cheating me of the thing I most need—her companionship."

Our interview was ended. I arose to depart. Then—

"Do you think I'm too exacting in the specifications I have laid down for a wife?" asked Ronald.

I assured him he was not.

"Well, then help me find her," he said, "for I'm really sincere."

The Grand Uproaries

LAWRENCE TIBBETT, baritone warbler of the Metropolitan Opera Company, has done a brodie into the movies and will do a chirpie for Metro. It's to be called The Rogue's Song and will not be by Verdi. So you needn't be bored right away by the announcement, thinking that "here comes Opera—here go I." Tibbett is a swell actor and not at all like the conventional, over-spaghettied Italian operatic type. He is a California lad, having been born at Bakersfield. His father, a county sheriff, was killed when Tibbett was but six, being bumped off in a fight with a gang of bandits. Brought up by his mother, the boy went through the Los Angeles schools, appeared in several amateur theatricals and made his stage début in a Shakespearean reportoire company.

Determined to become a concert singer, he first attracted some attention with the California Opera Company, then came to New York. He had a lot of trouble bringing on his wife and twin boys, but managed by the skin of his teeth. And, believe it or not, after five months, he got the job—with the Metropolitan Opera Company. He scored his first great triumph in Verdi's Falstaff. From then on he has gone higher and higher, till he stands next to Chaliapin as leading dramatic operatic star of the world. Well, it's not only a banker who can get somewhere with a note, is it, my dear little music and poor pun lovers?

Which reminds me—why, I don't know—of a Ring Lardner story. Mr. Lardner was sent to write a review of the current opera at the Metropolitan. As a joke, the management sat him in the top nigger-heaven, miles from the stage, way up with the gods, where Ring's head scraped the Opera House ceiling. Ring sat through the opera patiently, then went home and wrote: "I went to the Opera and was seated. By and by the curtain went up and two dwarfs appeared and began to scream."

Chitchat

LIONEL BARRYMORE came to town, performed business, went to Philadelphia, performed business, was seen by no one, and went back to Hollywood again. He's become the most important talkie director there is, they do say. . .Victor McLaglen came to New York, swamped the place and was forced out of town by old army pals borrowing money. More about his trip next month . . . If we hear the crack again about "Do you know Lehigh Valley—Rudy Vallee's brother?" or "Do you know Lily of the Valley—Rudy Vallee's sister?" we're going to commit mayhem, arson and garroting on the guilty party . . . I saw George Arliss, monocle, refined accent and all, walking down Fifth Avenue t'other day. He has just finished the Green Goddess, as a talkie. He made it as a silent picture a few years ago. He's one swell actor . . . Now that Journey's End and All Quiet on the Western Front have been bought by two movie companies, we're to have the war fought over again. Gawd help us! What the suffering world needs is a war to end all war movies . . . Ad seen outside a local house: Belle Bennett in The Power of Silence, with sound . . . And that will be that 'til next month.

Modern Episode

LITTLE Miss Muffet,
Sat on a tuffet,
Eating of curds and whey.
There came a big spider
And sat down beside her
And softly Miss Muffet did say:

GET off my tuffet,
There's just room for Muffet,
I care not for petting today.
I don't have to be brainy
To know you're Lon Chaney."
And she frightened poor Lon right away.

The Silent Voice

"You love someone else!" he accused. "You been steppin' out on me!"

"Stop! Oh, Abe," she moaned, "you hurt . . . please . . . I haven't even met him . . ."

"Him?"

"Yes . . . you're breaking my arm, Abe! . . . the man I think I love . . ."

She looked so utterly terror stricken that even Zarto felt a wave of pity. So with a shrug, he loosened his grip and allowed Merna to sink back in her chair.

IN TEN minutes, she was electrifying the night club habitués into thunderous applause. It was during the third encore that Merna discovered she was dancing immediately in front of the table occupied by Barry Rowe and Wanda. With a newly acquired daring, Merna flashed Barry an impudent smile; but when he grinned back, her dance suddenly became so involved that a mortified flush spread over her face and she was forced to dance hurriedly off the floor.

From his position in the doorway, Zarto eyed Barry narrowly, having come to his own conclusions as to the reason for Merna's confusion. But as she darted through the door, he was smart enough to dissimulate his cold fury.

"A cute little dancer," Barry observed. "Very talented."

Jerking her highball glass at the door through which Zarto and Merna had disappeared, Wanda remarked carelessly, "She keeps her job by bein' free an' easy with friend Abe. That's common or studio variety talk."

"It's hard to believe," said Barry; and although he was conscious of a queer, disturbing ache, his voice was quite calm.

LAUGHING lightly, Barry dropped a hand over her jeweled fingers. "Thanks for getting me that stunting contract, Wanda dear . . ."

"What did you want it for? You've got gold."

"Thrill, I guess—and also, of course, to be near you . . ."

"That," she whispered, attempting to look demure, "makes me forget tonal experts, fan writers and arsenic—but it took you nearly three months to get it out!"

Although unquestionably flattered, Barry appeared somewhat startled; wondering, perhaps, if he had inadvertently proposed.

"You're a good kid, Barry." Then, with a nervous smile, she peered at a small, emaciated waiter who was approaching them. "Well, what d'you want, Bull?" Wanda knew Zarto's personal factotum.

"The Rand airport," Bull whined from the corner of his thin mouth, "is callin' Mister Rowe—he can get the phone in Mister Zarto's private office . . ." Bull bowed ingratiatingly and scuttled away.

"Do you think you better go?" Wanda inquired, casting a nervous glance after Bull.

"Don't be dull," Barry laughed. "There's nothing dangerous about a phone call."

"I gotta vivid imagination," Wanda explained with a wry grin, "Guess I should have been a reformer. Hurry back."

BARRY entered Zarto's office only to discover the owner of the Sow's Ear resting in a comfortable arm chair, and the telephone receiver reposing on its hook. Barry looked at the receiver in polite astonishment.

"I'm the call," said Zarto, amiably. "Sit down, won't you?"

Barry declined: and with a shrug, Zarto informed him that he had a little suggestion to make. "Just that you lay off Merna Martin. She's a favorite of mine."

"I don't consider your advice quite necessary," Barry pointed out. "And furthermore, I'm not interested in any of your sweethearts—"

"As far as sweethearts go," Zarto put in, smoothly, "you been playing one of my cast-offs for some months. You of course knew that Wiley used to dance here before I foolishly got her a break and it went to her head . . . but that's neither here nor there—watch out, Rowe!"

Barry hesitated for a split second with his fist raised, ready to crash into Zarto's chin; and hearing a slight scraping sound behind him, followed by an apologetic cough, he whirled around only to stare down into the timid, cow-like eyes of Zarto's "man," Bull . . . Bull's right hand had been thrust into his tuxedo pocket, and the pocket bulged toward Barry, suggestively. With a harsh laugh, Barry lowered his fist and turned back to the imperturbable night club owner. "You don't forget anything . . . except your manners."

"I trust you remember yours, in the future," Zarto murmured suavely, "and keep your eyes off Merna Martin. I've got her pretty well sewed up . . . if you know what I mean."

"I think you're a damned liar," Barry snapped. "And if I want her, none of your contemptible little gunmen is going to stop me!"

"Oh, quite not," Zarto agreed. "I work more indirectly. Good evening, Mr. Rowe. . ."

MERNA, who was walking along the hall from her dressing room, was forced to jump back against the wall in order to save herself from being knocked to the floor by her idol, as he strode savagely toward the café.

Shortly after ten the next morning, Denton broke unceremoniously into "Uncle" Sol's office. "I just heard the play-back records of Merna Martin's voice and they're absolutely priceless!"

"You like id?" Sol asked, cautiously.

"Golden," Denton enthused. "Simply golden!" And such was his agitation that his monocle plumped from his eye. "I'll make the greatest talking picture star out of that little girl that ever graced a—"

"Vaid a minud!" Sol shouted. "Ve god a star. Vat ve vant iss a voice. Ve gotta keep Merna Marden submerged. Ve gotta be careful dot nobody knows dot Vanda ain't got her own voice!"

With a disgusted grunt, Denton replaced his monocle.

"You can double her voice hokay, Dendon?"

"It's called dubbing," Denton explained rather irritably. "Yes; we can if you think necessary . . ."

DENTON left the room, and a few minutes later, Sol was startled out of a troubled reverie by the jangle of his phone. "Yah? Oh, hella Abe. Vat? Don't worry aboudt dot. She's joost goin' to double—dubbing hit's called—for Vanda. Nah, she von't get nowhere. Yah, I know you're my best friend . . . Goo-bye."

As Sol replaced the receiver, Merna stepped into the room, radiantly happy.

"How dee doo, Miss Marden. Von't you sid down?"

"Thank you, Mr. Gotslieb."

"I suppose," he began cunningly, "dot you'd like to know aboudt your tests . ."

"Why, yes," Merna nodded. "Were they all right?"

"I'm sorry," said Sol. "But dey vas terrible."

As the import of her employer's words slowly seeped into her numbed mind, Merna's nails dug into the arms of her chair until her knuckles blazed out white against the tan of her small, finely-moulded hands. The room danced before her eyes in a lethargic phantasmagoria as she vaguely heard Sol's coarse voice scrape through her heartache and dismal dizziness: "Especially de screen test, Miss Marden. You ain't god photographic features, Miss Marden. Ve are sorry about dot."

SILENTLY, Merna stared at him; her eyes, wide and incredulous, began to fill with tears.

Sol leaned over his desk and patted her shoulder with one of his fat paws, while he drew a printed form from his desk drawer with the other.

"Now don' cry, leetle girl. Don' cry. Ve'll use you sometime, don' vorry." So saying, he thrust the paper in front of her blurred eyes. "Here's a new condract for two years ad fifty a veek instead of fordy—ven vorking—an' tirdy-fife ven hidle . . . Now, ain't dot nize?"

Merna brokenly, listlessly, thanked him; and she begged him to put her to work as soon as possible.

"Uncle" Sol Gotslieb allowed himself a satisfied beam.

"Don' vorry aboudt dot, Miss Marden. Joost trust in me!"

As the days wore on, Sol lived in mortal terror for fear the public would discover that The Flying Blonde was being made by resorting to a voice double for its star, and he spared no pains in attempting to infuse into Wanda's blonde pate how utterly impossible it would be for her to get another contract should the fact leak out that she possessed no recording voice. But Wanda wasn't much impressed. Casting herself down on the couch, she crossed her legs, exposing a perfect, silk-clad knee and stared flippantly across the office at her employer.

I CAN'T get another contract? Me, Wanda Wiley, the blonde menace? You're funnier than my first husband! An' that, my parsnip, is the quintessence—sure clickin' on the big ones today—of Benchlyanism. How you gettin' along with your 'isms, uncle?"

"Stop id!" cried Sol, springing to his feet and pacing desperately in front of this blonde, not to say aggravating, menace. "Oi, Oi, if I could only make you—"

"My Gawd, uncle, be your glands!"

"Oh, I don' mean dot!" he retorted, hotly, staring, in spite of his better judgment, admiringly, at the sheen of her knee. "I mean joost diss—"

"Speakin'," said Wanda, giving her ankle a suggestive flip, "of dot an' diss—Ah, you like it, eh?—I don' min' bringin' to your attention that this bouncin' baby girl's got more box-office appeal than any one else in the industry. Yeh. An' in spite of your barkin' Dentons and growlin' pictures, she can always get a contract!—Tut, tut, mine noncle, now don' interrupt!"

"Don' say noddings aboudt your voice being dubbed by a dooble an' don' rile oop Miss Marden!"

Wanda rose wearily to her feet.

"Oke, Unc, I'll keep the secret in my bonnet. But I still think that if your bright boy, Rogers Denton, knew his stuff, my voice would record as sexy as that swell little quicky bait, Merna Martin! Oh, forget it!"

"Tank Gott," whispered Sol, as the door closed behind his difficult star.

ON PASSING through the reception room, Wanda met Merna, who was just entering the front door.

"Hello, there," Wanda cooed, patronizingly.

"Why, hello, Miss Wiley," said Merna with a polite smile. "How are you? And how is Mr. Rowe?"

"Oh, Mr. Rowe's all right," Wanda assured her, starting down the steps. "How you gettin' along with your dubbin'?"

Merna stared uncertainly after Wanda as she swept down the front steps; then, as a mortified blush burned into her cheeks, she turned and continued toward the monitor room.

In a very few minutes, Denton was peering over the dials in his weirdly-lighted "glass cage" at Merna, who was singing into the microphone the titillating tune, I'm a Golden Girl, the theme song of The Flying Blonde.

And although Merna was singing with

YOU'll find SCREEN SECRETS to be the biggest quarter's worth of screen news on the stands today!

Stories by Harry Carr, whose position in Pacific Coast newspaperdom gives him an inside track to news in the making, are sure to thrill you.

Bob Moak gives you the slant of a keen-eyed observer and keeps step with the development of the talkies, which are still in their swaddling clothes.

Harmony Haynes tells you about the goings-on in the film colony, as only Harmony can.

And there are always human, breathing documents about the rise and fall of picture careers, depicting the hard, cheerless climb to rosy success—by the stars themselves.

SCREEN SECRETS means your money's worth!

a vivacious abandon, she was carefully watching the screen upon which Wanda was leading a cabaret revue; for she must perfectly synchronize her song with the movements of Wanda's lips. It was an absorbing and difficult task; so one could hardly blame Merna for feeling discouraged when Sol called her into his office and administered one of his oft-repeated lectures that she let no one know about her doubling.

"I won't tell anybody," Merna kept reiterating, wearily. "I won't tell a soul."

Finally, Gotslieb patted her on the shoulder, something in the manner of a pudgy bull fingering a Ming vase, and told her that for the time being they wanted her to get training—lots and lots of it.

MERNA smiled a sad little smile and stepped into the reception room. Denton was standing in the far corner, conversing in a low, emphatic voice with a quietly dressed young woman whose pale cheeks and abundant red hair engendered a rather terrifying effect until one was soothed by the calm intellectuality of her eyes.

Merna managed to smile brightly at Denton's greeting.

"Come on over here," he invited. "I want you to meet Betsy Manners who supports herself and a lavish wardrobe by writing for a few of our luckier fan magazines. Miss Merna Martin," Denton continued, giving Betsy a meaning look, "is the little stock actress I was telling you about."

"Indeed!" Betsy exclaimed. "I am delighted to make your acquaintance, Miss Martin—why, Rogers, she's simply divine!"

"Of course she is," said Denton, who was smugly twiddling his monocle by its ribbon.

Although Merna's heart warmed to Betsy Manners, her lips framed no answer.

"You're coming out with us, of course," Denton put in.

Yes; Merna would drive out to the Rand Airport with them and watch Barry stunt the Waco, a jet black biplane that Barry was piloting in The Flying Blonde. Merna had watched his stunting before; and when Wanda had been in the plane, she had been more than a trifle jealous.

AFTER a half hour drive, Denton parked his car and escorted his companions over the sun-baked earth and dried grass of the flying field to a group of excited spectators, scattered around the Waco. Various ships were taking off. Motors were droning. Noise and confusion punctuated the intense heat of this California afternoon. Presently, Sol, dusty, excited and covered with perspiration, burst out of the crowd and shouted over at Barry who was tinkering with his personal plane, the Yellow Bird.

Waving genially, Barry strode toward Sol, preceded by a long drawn out murmur of approbation. The light of joy that glinted in his eye at the sight of Merna, flickered uncertainly for a moment and then gave way to an angry flush; for Zarto, sleek in white flannels and sport coat, had suddenly approached and placed a possessive arm about Merna's shoulders. By the time she had wriggled out of Zarto's grasp, Barry was climbing into the cockpit of the Waco.

"Bud you haven't god Vanda!" Sol cried.

I'M NOT taking anybody this trip," Barry called back coldly. "That is, if you don't mind," he added, giving the throttle a sudden jerk. A great cloud of dust swept over the spectators as the Waco's motor emitted an ear-splitting roar and Barry taxied across the field. Presently the photographers' plane started in pursuit of its elusive object.

As Barry's ship dove, came up for a loop and on the highest point flopped over right-side-up and went into a falling leaf, Merna's hand fluttered to her throat and she found it impossible to suppress a cry of alarm.

"You don't have to worry, lady. That baby could fly a telephone pole and never give a wrong number." This word of consolation came from a rather gawky aviator who, after squirting a blob of tobacco juice into the dust and pushing his oil-soaked helmet back from his forehead, continued to calmly study Barry's maneuvers.

"Oh . . . do you know him?"

"Flown with Barry hundreds of times.

"And he can't have an accident?"

"Hell, no!"

Once more, Merna's eyes eagerly sought the miniature black cross which now seemed to be suspended perpendicularly in mid-air. The screaming of the Waco's motor and struts floated down to the over-awed spectators in a faint, rhythmic whine.

"He sure is feverish today," Merna's new aviator friend finally admitted. "But that's all right . . ."

"God!" somebody shouted. "Just look at that boy fly!"

"And de camera plane," Sol wailed, "ain't caught oop wid 'im yet!"

MERNA was slowly clicking her teeth together as though turning some important new thought over in her mind. Finally she plucked her friend's arm.

"Say," she whispered huskily, "do you think I could fly like that?"

"You mean as good as Barry Rowe?" He gaped incredulously at this preposterous young lady whose serious brown eyes were staring back so intently.

"Oh! Not as cleverly by any means —but as safely, perhaps?"

"Have you nerve?"

"Lots of it."

"Then I don't see why not . . . Hy! There's Wally Beery. He's got his own plane, you know. My name's Pete Brailley, instructor for Rand. What's yours?"

Merna told him. Then Brailley explained that it would take her barely ten weeks to get a private license. "The ground school will cost you about forty dollars, paid any way you like, then of course we'll give you eight hours dual and ten hours solo . . ." His attention was suddenly riveted on Barry's reckless flying.

BRAILLEY'S drawling words sang in Merna's ears with all the mellow beauty of a Stradivarius. With cheeks flushed and eyes shining brightly, she lingered over the exquisite joy derived from this glorious dream; a dream realized for a mere forty dollars paid any old way! Just let her once get a pilot's license, then she'd "l'arn" that Barry Rowe! Barry Rowe whom she worshiped more than life itself . . . But her bubble of happiness floated away toward the blue when Pete Brailley added, "Your flyin' time will set you back twenty-five dollars an hour . . . Come on over to the office and we'll go into detail . . ."

"If you don't mind, Mr. Brailley," Merna faltered, "I guess I'll just think it over a while."

"Oke," said Pete, and he disappeared into the crowd.

Denton and Betsy, who had overheard Merna's conversation, joined her, each taking one of her hands.

The crowd gasped in horror as Barry commenced stunting like a maniac. Finally he roared toward them and executed a barrel roll so close to the ground that his wing kicked dust. Then he banked around, brought the Waco to a perfect three-point landing and taxied to a stop.

Jumping out of his ship, he kidded with a few of the people close at hand; but in spite of his jocularity, his eyes glittered crazily as he called out, "How did you like that, Miss Martin?"

EVERYONE'S eyes turned to Merna —Merna was chalky white from her recent terror, and now weak from relief, she was unable to do anything but slowly shake her head in the negative. Her lips trembled as he called back, "I'm really sorry that you didn't, but I guess night club owners must be more interesting. Come on, Wanda, let's get out of here."

In less than an hour Merna was back at her dubbing in the monitor room. Wanda, lounging languidly in a studio chair, was watching Merna with amused contempt; but Denton's face was shaded apprehensively. He suspected Merna of being at an emotional crisis that she would be unable to endure much longer. An episode from The Flying Blonde had been flashed on the screen, and in the glare of the projection light which cut across her shoulders, her face looked strained and drawn.

On the screen, Wanda was standing in negligée at a pair of huge French doors leading from her boudoir to a wide expanse of lawn culminating in a willow-shaded creek. She was waving farewell to her lover, who was about to fly away for good. Presently the Waco flashed into sight, offered her an aerial salute, and soared away toward the gently breaking dawn. In order to bolster up her courage, Wanda was supposed to be singing I'm A Golden Girl... then carefully following Wanda's lips, Merna began to sing . . .

"I'm a golden girl . . . just a golden girl . . ."

She knew that Barry, doubling for the hero, was piloting the Waco, flying away toward the sun . . .

"But I love you . . . love you . . ."

Her soft voice filled the monitor room with an irresistible pathos. And as she wavered, Denton, whose monocle was glittering like a jewel, motioned encouragingly. Wanda sniffed contemptuously.

"But if you go away, I'll continue to play . . . Because I'm just a . . . golden . . . girl . . ."

LIGHTS!" cried Denton, as he sprang across the floor and caught Merna's swaying body in his arms.

"Vat's de matter?" ejaculated Sol, who had been sitting unobtrusively in the back of the room.

"Bring some water!" Denton commanded.

"I'm all right now," Merna finally protested. "And . . . and I'm very much ashamed . . . I . . . I think I had better go," she added, smiling through her tears.

"You'll find Miss Manners in the reception room," Denton told her kindly. "You wait for me there. We'll take you to dinner."

"You did rather well, Miss Martin," Wanda remarked, with a patronizing smile.

"I would say that she did," Denton nodded, icily.

Wanda uttered a short laugh as Merna walked out of the door. "I don't know what the world would do without our little vocal chord renovator." With that, she turned on her heel and left the monitor room.

"You gotta stop bein' so intimate vid diss Betsy Manners." Sol told Denton, with a shake of his pudgy finger.

Denton laughed outright. "Really?"

"Yah. She's liable to write sometings aboudt Merna Mardin an' den vere vill I be?"

"That's not a bad idea!"

"Vat's dot?"

"See you later," said Denton. "Have a dinner engagement."

WHILE dining that evening at the Montmartre, Denton and Betsy surprised Merna by suggesting that she take up flying. Merna laughed lightly and tried to pretend that she didn't care for aviation, but a few days later, Pete phoned and said they gave discounts to movie people—because of the publicity—and offered her a flying course at such an absurdly small sum, Merna simply couldn't resist; and both Denton and Betsy were delighted when Merna borrowed from them a small amount of money.

The day picked by Pete for Merna's first flight was rather inauspicious, as Premier Pictures were shooting one of their largest flying sequences during the same time. Sol's eyes bulged unbelievingly when he saw Merna climbing into the cockpit of a student plane.

"Hy, there, Miss Marden!" he shouted, running toward her. "Vat are you doink?"

"I am going to take a flying lesson," Merna explained.

Sol was probably visualizing the death to all his hopes of making a million on The Flying Blonde as he ordered her away from the ship. "If you vonce leave de grount," he threatened. "I'll fire you!"

For a moment, Merna hesitated. She had grown to hate this little German-Jew who wielded such power over her destiny. Hate mingled with terror gradually gave way to a feeling of righteous anger. She might as well assert herself now, as she would be forced to later.

"Fire away," she told him quite coolly, "But who, may I ask, will you find to dub for Miss Wanda Wiley?"

"Ssssh!" Sol cautioned nervously. "Don't mention dot oudt here . . ."

MERNA turned toward the ship as Sol began pleading with her to give up her flying lessons. "It's dangerous, Miss Marden. I don' vant you to leave the grount . . ."

"So you said." Merna was now sure of her position. "But nevertheless, I intend to."

"It's really quite dangerous," Barry commented, walking over with one of the camera men. "You might have a serious accident . . ."

"Would . . . would you care very much?" Merna inquired, with an impulsive gesture. Innumerable stars seemed drowned in her eyes as they pleaded with Barry.

"Why, I wouldn't want anyone to have an accident if it could be avoided."

And as Merna murmured, "I see," Barry laughed confusedly.

Merna's lips were pressed into a thin firm line and her cheeks seemed like two gardenias as she climbed into the cockpit. "It is getting late, Mr. Brailley," she cried. "We had better start!"

[To be continued]

To what desperate measures will Merna's fierce desire to win the dashing Barry Rowe lead her? To what lengths will shrewd, unscrupulous Abe Zarto's grim determination to possess Merna lead him? "The Boss Was Stumped"

"He was trying to figure out a way to speed up the machines. I could see he was stumped and I asked him if he would let me try my hand at it.

"'Go ahead,' he said, 'but I don't believe you can help much. Looks like an outside job to me.'

"So I started right in and pretty soon I had the whole thing worked out. The boss was watching me and I could see he was surprised.

"'How did you learn all that?' he asked in that quiet way of his. And then I told him I'd been studying at home nights through the International Correspondence Schools.

"He didn't say anything more and I thought he had forgotten all about it until he called me in his office a few weeks later and said he was going to make me foreman and increase my salary $75 a month."

That's a true story of what spare-time study has done for just one man. There are thousands of others. Why don't you take up a home-study course with the International Correspondence Schools and prepare yourself to earn more money?

Belle's New Role

dent. I had to go on with the test . . . I don't know how I did it, nor how I played the rôle which was given to me. There are whole sequences which I do not even remember taking. I looked at the picture after it was completed and said to myself: 'When did I do these scenes—or those?' It is a peculiar sensation to have a photographic proof of work which one does not remember doing at all."

SO POWERFUL was Miss Bennett's work in Stella Dallas that she was immediately acknowledged as one of the screen's greatest character actresses. Nothing could console her, of course, for the loss of her son, but she had another son—an adopted one—to live and work for.

"You know, I adopted a boy years ago to be a companion for my Billy," she said. "This dear boy married one of my other adopted children and now they have a darling little eight-months-old baby. He is the youngest of all my 'children.'

"You ask about these children? Yes, I have legally adopted them—and all together I now have twenty-nine to look after. I recently adopted fourteen from the Middle West and had them come out here to live in several little bungalows that I have on my land. Many of these fourteen were orphans, living or rather existing in a small town in the Middle West. I heard of their destitution and wrote them, sending money to buy food and clothing and later, train fare to come to California. You should have seen them when they arrived! One poor child was covered with burns and bruises—another had been through many operations and was a cripple, but now, thanks to science and good care, they are all well and happy.

A FEW years ago, Miss Bennett became the wife of Fred Windermere, a film director, and she confessed that her marriage is an uncommonly happy one. It was only a few months after her marriage that her only son was killed and Belle's heart crushed.

"I couldn't understand why that sorrow must come to me," she said, "and for a long while, I was very ill. Finally, we went to New York and there I had a nervous breakdown and the doctors said pneumonia. One day, I heard them say, 'It will be many weeks before she can move from here.' And all at once, my grief seemed somehow lifted. The knowledge came to me—'God did not intend we should suffer so. It is my right to be well and strong and I am going to be!'

"The next day, I was to talk over the radio—a network of sixteen stations had been hooked up. I thought of all those people waiting to hear just 'me' and I decided I couldn't disappoint them and stay in bed. So I kept my appointment and talked over the radio, and after I had done so, I felt much better. The doctors thought I was crazy, but I wasn't—and incidentally, I didn't go back to bed!"

MISS BENNETT is now hard at work on Richard Thomas' epic of the American school teacher, The Woman Who Was Forgotten. She was selected as the one woman perfectly fitted to play the leading part in this picture, which will be dedicated to the school teachers of America and endorsed by the National Board of Education. The cast includes Gladys McConnell, who will be seen as a young school teacher, and Le Roy Mason, who will play the part of her lover. Others who have promised to appear in several scenes are Thomas Edison, Henry Ford and Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh.

After the film is completed, Belle Bennett will be received at Washington, where the premiére will take place, and she will be the guest of several notables and welcomed at the White House, where she will be given a medal of honor.

Miss Bennett lives in a pretty Spanish home on the border of a lake, with her husband, her seventy-two-year-old grandmother, her adopted son and his wife and baby, and her housekeeper who has been with her ever since she was born—in fact, was her mother's maid.

BELLE took me all over the house and into her own private room where pictures of her dearly beloved son, Billy, were everywhere. I met many of her children and talked with them. "What do you call Miss Bennett?" I asked.

Three little girls answered in unison, "Angel Belle!" And tiny boy twins piped up, "Mother Belle is so beautiful we all love her!"

At the foot of the front stairway, on the wall, hung a magnificent tapestry. The figure of Joan of Arc on her white horse was woven into it—and the face of Joan was the face of Belle Bennett.

"There is a story connected with that," exclaimed Belle. "A girl friend of mine made it for me and it took her one entire year. When finished, I learned that she had been offered $1,000 for it, but wouldn't take it. She insisted she made it for me and although she really could use the money, she wouldn't take it. I had a gathering of friends at the unveiling of this tapestry and all of them upon seeing it exclaimed: 'Why Belle, you are pictured as Joan!'

"'Yes,' my young artist friend replied, 'Belle is a real Joan of Arc. I know she sees things we do not and I believe she hears what we do not. She is what her mother always wanted her to be—a great lady!'"

Knowing Belle Bennett, I think that is a very fine description of her.

Imagine this attractive bed-davenport, cozy club rocker and fireside wing chair in your home. What comfort, what rest, what pleasure they will give! And how beautiful! The serviceable Blue and Taupe Figured Velour covering is snugly and smoothly tailored in rich overstuffed style. An excellent grade with a handsome pattern that will harmonize with any furnishings.

Whoever dreamed of an overstuffed suite at this low price? The sturdy, attractive hardwood frames are finely finished in Brown Mahogany. Inner construction guarantees comfort and serviceability. There are 18 coil springs in the davenport seat and 5 in the seat of each chair, all overlaid with sanitary interior upholstering materials, giving resilience and restful comfort. Backs, arms and seats are well padded. Very handsome. Will give years of wear. Comfortable Bed-Davenport is 53 in. wide overall and 49 in. between the arms. Seat is 21 in. deep, back 17 in. above seat. You do not sleep on the upholstery. No, indeed! The bed section has its own comfortable link fabric spring. With one easy motion you transform the davenport into a double bed, 72 x 48 in. Gives you service 24 hours a day—an investment in economy and comfort you should not miss.

The Fireside Chair (seldom included in low priced suites) has padded side wings, making a cozy head rest. Back is 22½ in. high above seat, which measures 21 x 19 in. Club rocker has seat 20 x 19 in., with club style back, 18½ in. high. Both chairs are 33½ in. wide overall.

The Face

The Blade

The Wonder Worker

365 Shaves With the Same Blade!

—and Still Going Strong

THINK of it! 365 keen, cool shaves a year—and not one penny for blades during the whole time! That's what an amazing new shaving invention did for J. W. Starksbury of Oklahoma! And W. D. Carroll of Pennsylvania got two solid years of slick shaves out of an old blade that was just about worn out to begin with! No wonder experts everywhere are simply astonished!

KRISS KROSS—the remarkable invention that makes such long-distance shave records possible—deserves to be called much more than a stropper. Rather it is a super-stropper or blade rejuvenator. Almost literally, it makes a new blade out of an old one every day—makes hundreds of keen, quick shaves blossom where only one grew before. Until you've seen KRISS KROSS—fitted its sturdy, nickeled smoothness into the palm of your hand and tested its uncanny ingenuity, you'll never know how really sensational this announcement is!

MAGIC DIAGONAL STROKE

KRISS KROSS employs the diagonal stroke, same as a barber uses. Never before has anyone captured the secrets of successfully reproducing this stroke automatically. Eight "lucky leather grooves" do the trick in 11 seconds with a precision it takes a master barber years to attain.

But that's not all. KRISS KROSS embodies still another feature that has hitherto baffled mechanical reproduction. It strops from heavy to light. It's absolutely uncanny the way the strokes grow lighter and lighter until an adjustable, automatic jig flies up and notifies you that your blade is ready — ready with the keenest cutting edge that steel can take!

NO MORE BLADES TO BUY!

No wonder that this super-stropper prolongs the life of any make blade—single or double edge — for weeks, months and years! Think what it means! No more bother about remembering to buy new blades! No more "raking" with dull ones! Eleven seconds with KRISS KROSS and your blade has the slickest, keenest edge that ever said "Good Morning" to your chin. It solves your blade problem for all time. Keen, velvet-smooth shaves forever. And think of the economy!

New-Type Razor Blade FREE!

To introduce KRISS KROSS stropper, we are including this month free samples of a revolution in razor blade construction. Made to fit your present razor. Guaranteed to last longer and shave better than any other. Expect a new shaving sensation — KRISS KROSS blades are made of a unique steel, made a new and better way.

GET FREE OFFER!

Send for full information on these surprising new inventions today. KRISS KROSS products are never sold in stores. You deal direct with me or my authorized representative. Write for illustrated description and full details of free razor blade offer. It's even more remarkable than I can tell you in this short space. Clip the coupon now. Mail it today.

Makes $66 IN ONE DAY

Make big money with KRISS KROSS. Giving away FREE razor blades boosts your profits amazingly. H. King made $66 in one day. N. C. Paige made $104 in 3 days. SPARE-TIME workers, OFFICE and FACTORY men make $6-$12 extra a day showing KRISS KROSS to friends and fellow employes. Get details at once. Check bottom of coupon and mail it tonight!

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER PRODUCES THE 3 SENSATIONAL SMASH HITS OF THE SEASON

CECIL B. DeMILLE, director of a hundred hits, has made in Dynamite what will be considered his greatest screen achievement. A thrilling drama which explodes the hypocrisy of the modern Babel called Society. Dynamite digs through the outer veneer of sham, pretense and glitter—and gets down to the bed-rock of human emotions. Charles Bickford, Conrad Nagel and Kay Johnson give the best performance of their careers. All-talking. Also silent version.

WHAT a cast! More stars than there are in heaven! A glittering, gorgeous, spectacular revue—the kind you would pay $6.60 for on Broadway. Marion Davies, John Gilbert, Norma Shearer, William Haines, Joan Crawford, Buster Keaton, Bessie Love, Charles King, Conrad Nagel, Marie Dressler, Jack Benny, Gus Edwards, Karl Dane, George K. Arthur, Stan Laurel, Oliver Hardy, Cliff Edwards (Ukulele Ike,) Anita Page, Polly Moran, Gwen Lee, Brox Sisters, Albertina Rasch Ballad, Natacha Nattova & Co., The Rounders, and a chorus of 200. A remarkable all-singing, all-talking, all-dancing picture. The hit picture with the song hits!

HERE is the picture that Broadway went wild about—Hallelujah, the greatest drama of its kind ever produced. Directed by KING VIDOR, who made The Big Parade—this stirring drama of the Southland immortalizes the soul of the colored race. Daniel Haynes, noted Negro singer, and Nina Mae McKinney, a beauty discovered in the night clubs of Harlem, lead an all-Negro cast in this remarkable production. One of the classics of the screen that will never die. Don't miss it! Hear Irving Berlin's "Waiting at the End of the Road."

William Fox presents

"They had to See Paris"

—and did they touch the high spots? WOW!

NEUILLY

—where Mrs. Peters rented the chateau to ensnare the Marquis for her daughter.

TOUR EIFFEL

LE RAT MORT
MONTMARTRE

—where "Pike" Peters met Claudine, the gold-digging grisette.

CIROS

—where Mrs. Peters met the Marquis de Brissac Coudray and a possible title for her unmarried daughter.

BOULEVARD de CLICHY

—Claudine's apartment where Mrs. Peters went to find Pike.

ARC de TRIOMPHE

—where Pike met his son Ross and discovered his affaire de coeur with Fleurie.

HOTEL des TROIS COULEUR

—where Pike staged a scene with Claudine to horrify Ross, whom he expected any moment.

WILL ROGERS

as "Pike" Peters, saw everything that Paris had to show—and that's an eyeful. At the Folies-Bergère he shouted "Pike's peek or bust." He paixed and paixed at the Cafe de la Paix. Ooo-la-la-la!

At Notre Dame, he spent all day looking for the hunchback and thought a chapeau was a place to live. He was gold-digged from Montmartre to the Latin Quarter, which he thought was two bits in Roman money.

America's favorite comedian and most natural talking picture actor is a riot in this hilarious comedy of a newly rich American family who tried to crash Parisian society.

Go to Paris via this all-talking Fox Movietone of Homer Croy's novel, dramatized by Owen Davis.

directed by FRANK BORZAGE

CAFE des DEUX MAGOTS LATIN QUARTER

—where Pike's son, Ross, met and fell in love with Fleurie, the midinette.

LA BELLE POULE

—one of the places Pike missed!

BOULEVARD ST. GERMAIN

—where Ross and Fleurie set up housekeeping—an old French custom.

BOULEVARD des ITALIENS

—where the family, reunited, bought their tickets back to America—sadder and wiser.

. . . The Book That Zealous Reformers Once Burned in Public!

At Last!
Censorship No Longer Denies You This Thrill of Thrills—

Tales from THE GREAT DECAMERON...

YOU'LL never know life until you've read this greatest of all forbidden books! You'll never know how utterly stark and vivid a picture of human passions can be painted in words until you've feasted on the most fascinating tales from the greatest of all true-to-life books—the immortal Decameron of Boccaccio!

Between its pages, the thrill of a lifetime of reading awaits you. Before your very eyes is unfolded the glittering pageantry of a golden age now vanished—an age when passion, intrigue and high-riding romance held full sway. Past you, in a breath-taking parade, sweep some of the most beautiful, yet unprincipled, women of all time—women whose intense fascination fired men's blood and even altered the fates of empires . . . Here you will find tales of scarlet days, when a robust world drank of life and love to its very dregs!

Few writers have ever dared to write so intimately of the frailties to which the flesh is heir. But the flaming pen of Giovanni Boccaccio knew no restraint. Sophisticated and fearless to the ultimate degree, his stories are not only brilliant fiction of the most gripping variety—but also the most illuminating record of life in fourteenth-century Italy ever penned. Hardly a detail of these stirring times escaped his ever watchful eye—and what he saw, he wrote, without hesitation or fear!

These Great Writers Have Taken Plots From the Decameron

Shakespeare took parts of The Merchant of Venice, Cymbeline, All's Well That Ends Well and Romeo and Juliet from these stories. Lessing took the plot of Nathan der Weise, Chaucer the idea of his Canterbury Tales, Dryden, Keats, Longfellow and Tennyson wrote poems—all based on these great tales, which have outlived thousands of manuscripts written since their day.

Mystery No Longer Shrouds This Brilliant Masterpiece!

Perhaps no other book ever written has had such an amazing history. Written in so vigorous a style as to be actually startling, it has long been a storm center of fierce controversy and even persecution. Critics and the haute-monde have acclaimed it with unstinted praise for its sparkling vividness and subject matter—while prudish zealots and tyrannical reformers, aghast at the utter frankness with which Boccaccio exposed human life and love in the raw, resorted to every possible means to keep this masterpiece from general circulation. At one time they actually went so far as to gather all the available copies and have them publicly burned!

But all that was yesterday! Today the thrill that awaits the reader within the glowing pages of Decameron Tales is no longer denied you. This is the age of reason—and the peerless word-artistry of genial old Boccaccio has come into its own at last! . . . Now, for a short time only, you can inspect these great examples of realistic writing in your own home for five days, without obligation.

A Literary Treasure-House

Rich in fascinating plot, tense with action and vibrant with human passion—the Decameron has furnished plots for the world's great masters of literature. Longfellow, Keats, Dryden, Chaucer, and even the great Shakespeare himself sought these immortal pages for inspiration. In no other volume are the morals and customs of Italy of the fourteenth century so graphically laid before you—the way people lived, the hovels and palaces they dwelt in, the fantastic pleasures they indulged in—all are told with both wit and pathos that are indescribable. Thus the stories not only amuse and entertain, but constitute a landmark of literature which must not be passed over if you would broaden your vision—make yourself truly cultured.

THE voice of Ronald Colman proved fatal to his mother when she heard it in his first talking picture, Bulldog Drummond. Mrs. Colman, who resided in Sydney, New South Wales, Australia, attended a local theater during the first showing of the picture. She had not heard her famous son's voice for eight years, and the joy of hearing it was so great it affected her heart. She collapsed in the theater, dying several days later.

Lewis Stone has entered suit for divorce from his wife, who is known on the stage as Florence Oakley. The charges are cruelty and incompatibility.

Suffering from a nervous disorder, Jean Eagels, star of The Letter and other screen plays, took an overdose of drugs and died in the office of her physician. She was thirty-five years old.

Alice White will marry Sidney Bartlett, according to an announcement made by the First National star.

Roland Young, New York stage star, has been signed on long-term contract by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Kathryn Crawford has been borrowed from Universal by Pathé to be Alan Hale's leading woman in Red Hot Rhythm.

Sono-Art has just signed Reginald Denny for a series of pictures.

Colleen Moore and her husband, John McCormick have left for a two-month's vacation. They plan to sail from New York through the Panama Canal to San Francisco, spending some little time in the Central American countries.

Constance Bennett has been signed by First National for the lead opposite Richard Barthelmess in his next picture, as yet untitled.

Dorothy Mackaill's contract with First National expires January 31, after which time she is planning to take a well-earned rest.

Josephine Dunn has refused a renewel of her contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and is leaving that organization to free lance.

The famous Paramount star, George Bancroft and his wife, photographed on the deck of the "Ile de France," as they left for Europe. Having obtained a long-sought vacation from the studio, Bancroft expects to be absent from America for some time as his vacation will include visits to many European countries.

Leatrice Joy has been signed by the Brunswick Phonograph Company to make a record of the theme song from her latest picture, A Most Immoral Lady.

Joan Bennett is to appear in one of the new United Artists short subjects, Irish Rhapsody before starting her part opposite Harry Richman in his first starring picture, Play Boy.

Joan Crawford's next starring production will be Montana, a wild and woolly western. This will be her first picture under the new starring contract she has just signed with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Sam Wood has been assigned to replace Jack Conway as director of the first talking picture starring Van & Schenck, vaudeville team. Wood was named when Conway was rushed to the hospital for an operation for appendicitis. Although the operation was successful, it will be some time before Conway will be able to return to the studio.

J. C. Nugent, father of Elliott Nugent, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer player, has signed a long-term contract with the same company, and the father and son will appear together in Father's Day, an original screen comedy.

Tom Moore and Blanche Sweet will be co-starred in an original story of New York night life, prepared for M-G-M by Philip Dunning, author of Broadway. Albert Kelly and Robert Ober will direct this picture, as yet untitled.

A committee, representing practically all the important women's organizations of the country, has selected Mrs. T. G. Winter, past president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, as their representative "to interpret to the makers of motion pictures the feeling and wishes of womanhood in regard to the medium's development to its highest usefulness".

WIN $1000.00 CASH

NAME THIS

This Offer Open to Every Reader of this Announcement

Have you sent a name? If not, do so at once. It makes no difference who you are or where you live we want you to send us a name for this new and unusual shampoo. Whoever sends the most suitable name will win the one thousand dollars—nothing else to do. Just write or print the name on any kind of paper—neatness doesn't count.

Nothing to Buy—Nothing to Sell

You can use a coined word or a word made by combining two or more words, such as "Sungleam," "Youthglow," etc., or any other name you think would fit the high quality of this shampoo. Or your name might suggest the handy new container, our latest sanitary tube from which the Shampoo is simply squeezed out, thus eliminating the waste and trouble caused by the old-fashioned liquid soap in bottles. There is nothing to buy or sell—simply the person sending the most suitable suggestion for a name will receive $1,000.00 cash prize, or if prompt $1,100.00 in all.

ANY NAME MAY WIN

No matter how simple you think your suggestion is you cannot afford to neglect sending it at once. Any name may win.

Win this $1000 cash prize by a few moments' thought. How can you earn this amount of money easier or more quickly? Remember, there is no obligation! The person submitting the winning name will have nothing else to do to win the $1000 and the extra $100, if prompt. In choosing a name bear in mind this shampoo is marvelous for cleansing the hair and scalp. It is designed to bring out the beauty, lustre and natural gloss of the hair. Remember, too, how handy the new sanitary tube is for traveling, no bottle to leak or spill, no cake of soap to lie around and collect germs. The only thing necessary to win is to send the name we choose as the best and most suitable for this shampoo. Only one name will be accepted from each contestant. This unusual offer is only one of a number of offers embraced in our novel distribution plan of ultra toilet goods, whereby those taking part may win any one of a hundred other prizes, the highest of which is $8,000.00 cash. By participating in our distribution plan the winner of the $1,100.00 cash prize may win an additional $8,000.00, making a total of $9,100.00. Everyone sending a name, regardless of whether it wins or not, will be given the same opportunity to win the $8,000.00 or one of the other one hundred cash prizes. Get busy with your suggestion at once—do not delay!

$100 Extra For Promptness

To get quick action we are going to pay the winner an extra $100.00 for promptness, or $1,100.00 in all—so send your suggestion AT ONCE!

CONTEST RULES

This contest is open to everyone except members of this firm, its employes and relatives.

Each contestant may send only one name. Sending two or more names will cause all names submitted by that person to be thrown out.

Contest closes April 30, 1930. Duplicate prizes will be given in case of ties.

To win the promptness prize of $100 extra, the winning name suggested must be mailed within three days after our announcement is read.

THE GAB BAG

A meeting place for readers to discuss their views on motion pictures.

Buffalo, N. Y.

Dear Screen Secrets:

Wasn't Barry Norton great in Sins of the Fathers? That picture convinced me beyond a doubt that he can act, and this handsome young lad should be a star in no time.

Why can't Clara Bow keep her clothes on, and really act, instead of doing wildly silly things like jumping into pools, socking everybody in sight and flinging off chemises, stepins, etc. And, may I ask, is that acting? Oh, yes, they call it art! Oh, well, it's worth a good laugh, anyway.

Where is Lane Chandler and Carroll Nye? C'mon, get busy and make some new pictures, me hearties.

A large armful of bouquets for Sue Carol, Neil Hamilton, Buddy Rogers and SCREEN SECRETS.

Sincerely,

IRENE HOFFMAN.

Well, well, what will Clara Bow fans think of this? Lane Chandler and Carroll Nye ARE busy, and you will be able to enjoy them in several pictures in the immediate future. Thanks for the bouquet!

Leadville, Colo.

Dear Editor:

I read the life stories of Lupe Velez, Betty Compson and George Bancroft, and I thought they were great. During all the coming life stories, I hope Sue Carol's life story will be among them, as I know many would appreciate it greatly. I would like to see Sue's picture in SCREEN SECRETS more often—so would many others.

Sincerely yours,

A SUE CAROL FAN.

Good news for you! In this issue, you will find a pictorial history of Sue Carol, and the first episode of the life story of Maurice Chevalier.

San Bufall, Calif.

Dear Editor:

Two letters in the last issue I think were very unfair. One slammed Lupe Velez while the other writer said he was tired of Buddy Rogers, and both said that your magazine would be better without their pictures. Neither Lupe Velez nor Buddy Rogers is my favorite star, but undoubtedly both have very many admirers. How can anyone expect to deprive others of their favorites?

My favorite actor is David Rollins who, I think, gets too little notice from the public and most of the magazines. Look at his work in Imagine My Embarrassment. How about a nice article on him in your magazine?

Some stars whom I have liked in recent pictures are Richard Arlen in Four Feathers and Thunderbolt, George Bancroft in Thunderbolt, and Charles Farrell in Lucky Star.

In closing I'd like to say that, of all the movie magazines, I think SCREEN SECRETS is the best.

G. M. S.

Your argument in regard to Lupe Velez is certainly a fair one. We are glad you like SCREEN SECRETS, and the tip on David Rollins is great. Look for a story on this young man in an early forthcoming issue.

Charles Buddy Rogers is the center of interest in "The Gab Bag" this month as his defenders come to the rescue to refute the sharp criticism Buddy drew from C. B. Q. in the October issue.

Readers are invited to express freely their opinions relative to any phase of the motion picture industry in "The Gab Bag." Letters should be limited to 300 words. While fans everywhere are welcome to use these columns for frank discussion of pictures, players and other matter relating to the screen, views expressed by readers are not necessarily in accordance with the editorial views of SCREEN SECRETS.

—Captain Roscoe Fawcett, Editor.

Evanston, Ill.

Dear Sir:

I see that, in your October issue, C. B. Q. asks you to "cut out" printing Buddy Rogers' picture in your magazine. If you did that, although you would be doing C. B. Q. a favor you would NOT be doing millions of other fans a favor! I sincerely hope you will not cut Buddy out of your magazine. Of course, those who don't like Buddy's pictures don't have to look at them, do they? I believe there are many other fans who would side with me against C. B. Q.

Sincerely,

H. B. P.

Buddy's picture in the columns of this department should allay your fear of his being "cut out" of SCREEN SECRETS.

New York, N. Y.

Dear Editor:

I think the magazine (SCREEN SECRETS) is getting along wonderfully well and I'm sure you have reason to be satisfied with the progress it has made. It has genuine zest and sparkle.

Sincerely,

R. E. SHERWOOD.

This comment, coming from Robert E. Sherwood, one of America's foremost screen observers, is most gratifying, and we hope that all of our other readers are of Mr. Sherwood's opinion.

Paris, Texas.

Dear Editor:

Some fans wonder where Theodore Kosloff, who was once such a popular leading man for Paramount, is. He is in Dallas, Texas, and has a very large studio for the studying of the dance, stage, and screen. He hasn't appeared on the screen for some time, but has been connected with Cecil B. de Mille's

START TONIGHT AND REDUCE WEIGHT!

Start Reducing Tonight at Home and Feel Better Tomorrow Morning Than You Have For Months
(Every Statement Certified From Actual Experience)
SEND THE COUPON FOR YOUR FIRST THREE FAYRO BATHS

Thousands of smart women have found this easy way to take off excess weight once or twice a week. These women take refreshing Fayro baths in the privacy of their own homes.

Fayro contains many of the same natural mineral salts that make effective the waters of twenty-two hot springs of America, England and Continental Europe. For years the spas and hot springs bathing resorts have been the retreat of fair women and well groomed men.

Excess weight has been removed, skins have been made more lovely bodies more shapely, and minds brighter.

The Hot Springs Are Now Brought To You

A study of the analyses of the active ingredients of the waters from twenty-two of the most famous springs have taught us the secret of their effectiveness. You can now enjoy these benefits in your own bath. Merely put Fayro into your hot bath. It dissolves rapidly. You will notice and enjoy the pungent fragrance of its balsam oils and clean salts.

Then, Fayro, by opening your pores and stimulating perspiration, forces lazy body cells to sweat out surplus fat and bodily poisons. Add Fayro to your bath at night and immediately excess weight will have been removed in an easy, refreshing and asolutely harmless manner.

Fayro will refresh you and help your body throw off worn out fat and bodily poisons. Your skin will be clearer and smoother. You will sleep better after your Fayro bath and awaken feeling as though you had enjoyed a week's vacation.

Results Are Immediate

Weigh yourself before and after your Fayro bath. You will find you have lost weight. And a few nights later when you again add Fayro to your bath, you will once more reduce your weight. As soon as you are the correct weight for your height do not try to reduce further. No need to deny yourself wholesome meals. No need for violent exercise. No need for drugs or medicines. Merely a refreshing Fayro bath in the privacy of your own home.

Try Fayro At Our Risk

The regular price of Fayro is $1.00 a package. With the coupon you get 3 full sized packages and an interesting booklet "Health and Open Pores" for $2.50 plus the necessary postage. Send no money. Pay the postman. Your money refunded instantly if you want it. The booklet also contains dietetic lists and information compiled by eminent specialists.

More Than a Million Fayro Treatments Have Been Sold

It Seemed So Strange to Hear Her Play

We Knew She Had Never Taken a Lesson from a Teacher!

WE always thought of her as an onlooker, you know. A sort of social wallflower. Certainly she had never been popular, never the center of attraction in any gathering.

That night of the party when she said, "Well, folks, I'll entertain you with some selections from Grieg"—we thought she was joking. A rather poor joke, at that. But she actually did get up and seat herself at the piano.

Everyone laughed—and went right on chatting I was a little sorry for her. But I saw her chin go up, her eyes flash. She played a chord, and it rang through the room like a challenge. "Listen!" it seemed to say.

And suddenly the room was hushed . . .

She played Anitra's Dance—played it with such soul fire that the room faded and we seemed to see gypsies swaying and chanting around the camp fire. Everyone sat forward, tense, listening. When the last glorious chord vanished like an echo, she turned around and faced us, her face glowing, her eyes happy. "Well!" she seemed to be saying, "you thought I was bluffing. But I can play!"

We were astonished—and contrite. We surged forward in a mass to congratulate her. "How did you do it?" "Why you are wonderful!" "We can't believe you never had a teacher!" An onlooker no longer—she was popular! She played for us all evening, and now no one would even think of having a party without inviting her.

She Told Me About It Later

We were lifelong friends, and I felt I could ask her about it. "You played superbly!" I said. "And I know you never had a teacher. Come—what's the secret?"

"No secret at all!" she laughed. "I just got tired of being left out of things and I decided to do something that would make me popular. I couldn't afford an expensive teacher and I didn't have the time for a lot of practice—so I decided to take the famous U. S. School of Music course. In my spare time, you know."

"You don't mean to say you learned how to play so beautifully by yourself, right at home in your spare time?" I was astounded. I couldn't believe it.

"Yes—and it's been such fun! Why, it's as easy as A-B-C, and I didn't have a bit of trouble. I began playing almost from the start, and right from music. Now I can play any piece—classical or jazz. From the notes, you know."

"She played Anitra's dance—played it with such soul fire that the room faded and we seemed to see gypsies swaying and chanting around the camp fire."

"You're wonderful!" I breathed. "Think of playing like that, and learning all by yourself."

"I'm not wonderful," she replied. "Anyone could do it. A child can understand those simplified lessons. Why, it's like playing a game."

"You always wanted to play the violin—here's your chance to learn quickly and inexpensively. Why don't you surprise everyone, the way I did?"

I took her advice—a little doubtfully at first—and now I play not only the violin but the banjo!

How You Learn Any Instrument So Easily This Way

The amazing success of students who take the U. S. School course is largely due to a wonderful, newly perfected method that makes reading and playing music almost as simple as reading aloud from a book. You simply can't go wrong. First, you are told how a thing is done, then a picture shows you how, then you do it yourself and hear it. No private teacher could make it any clearer. The admirable lessons come to you by mail at regular intervals. They consist of complete printed instructions, diagrams, all the music you need, and music paper for writing out test exercises. And if anything comes up which is not entirely plain, you can write to your instructor and get a full, prompt, personal reply!

Whether you take up piano, violin, 'cello, organ, saxophone, or any other instrument, you find that every single thing you need to know is explained in detail. And the explanation is always practical. Little theory—plenty of accomplishment. That's why students of this course get ahead twice as fast—three times as fast—as those who study old-time, plodding methods.

Booklet and Demonstration Lesson Sent FREE

You, too, can quickly teach yourself to be an accomplished musician right at home. This wonderful method has already shown half a million people how to play their favorite instrument by note. To prove that you can do the same, let us send you our booklet and valuable Demonstration Lesson—both FREE. The booklet will also tell you all about the amazing new Automatic Finger Control.

Forget the old-fashioned idea that you need "talent." Read the list of instruments to the left, decide which you want to play, and the U. S. School of Music will do the rest. At the cost of only a few pennies a day to you!

Send coupon now. Act without delay. Instrument supplied when needed, cash or credit. U. S. School of Music, 3612 Brunswick Building, New York City.

"I am making excellent progress on the 'cello—and owe it all to your easy lessons."
George C. Lauer, Belfast, Maine.

"I am now on my 12th lesson and can already play simple pieces. I knew nothing about music when I started."
Ethel Harnishfeger, Fort Wayne, Ind.

"I have completed only 20 lessons and can play almost any kind of music I wish. My friends are astonished. I now play at church and Sunday School."

I Sell Records a Queer Way

So people tell me, because I will gladly send to any person who sends me his name and address, a selection of ten records absolutely ON TRIAL, entirely at my risk. Choose any records you want.

Furthermore, I positively insist that you return the records to me at once, if they are in any way inferior to records that sell for three or four times as much. Don't be "sorry" for me, but shoot the records back, and let me stand the postage expense both ways, unless the records are better, clearer and richer in tone than any records you have ever before had, at any price.

I have built a million-dollar business in records on just these "queer" methods, trusting absolutely in the honesty of my customers, and making them the sole judge of whether or not the records will cost them even one cent.

I've built these records to give you pleasure, enjoyment and some real honest good times for months and years to come. I've tried to study the wishes and tastes of the great music-loving public and I've collected in this list below, the very CREAM of my entire catalog. All the records are electrically recorded—and nearly all of them have been done within the last few months, and are in the very latest and best style of the present day. They are all in the standard ten-inch size with music on both sides and play on any phonograph, just like 75-cent records. They include the most recent hits, as well as famous old favorites, and I'm willing to stake my last dollar that they are GOOD.

Choose any ten records you want and simply write their catalog number on coupon below. Send no money. See terms on coupon and see how fully I protect you in every way.

YOU'LL SEE "PARIS" IN COLOR

—Breath-taking Broadway revue spectacles—glorified beauty ensembles—superbly extravagant gowns and settings—in all the glory of their full natural color, reproduced by the amazing new Technicolor process . . . setting the 1930 style for motion pictures!

YOU'LL SEE A FAMOUS STAGE STAR IN "PARIS"

—Irene Bordoni—Paris' present to America. For years her name has helped light Broadway. . . Now for the first time you'll see it on your home-town theatre! Dazzling, sparkling, inimitable—to see and hear her is to understand all the lure of playful Paree.

"PARIS" BRINGS YOU A GREAT BROADWAY HIT

—Last season's reigning New York stage hit transplanted to the screen, with all the color, songs and comedy that captivated critical Manhattan. See for yourself why thousands paid $4.40 per seat to see this hilarious story of the frantic loves of a great French actress and her "misleading" man!

3 REASONS why you'll call this the greatest singing-dancing picture ever!

Irene BORDONI in "PARIS" with JACK BUCHANAN

With Jason Robards, Zasu Pitts, and Louise Closser Hale. A Clarence Badger production. Based on the play by Martin Brown.

THE EDITOR'S OPINION

¶ Events and problems of the screen.

MRS. THOMAS WINTER—distinguished as a former president of the Federation of Women's Clubs—is going to Hollywood as a sort of feminine version of Will Hays.

She has been employed by the Producers' Association to advise them from the standpoint of club women of the world.

To reporters, she has announced that her concern is not so much with the morals of films—with which she seems to find little fault—but it is the banality of the movie stories that offends her.

Captain Roscoe Fawcett, Editor.

If picture stories are often commonplace and hackneyed, it is not because the producers, or the directors or even the actors have any gnawing passion for banality—the difficulty is in finding the direction to take away from trite themes in pictures.

Every motion picture has an enormous audience. The average picture is seen by more people in one night than the aggregate of all the audiences who ever witness a stage play—even a successful one. As a consequence of this wholesale appeal, every motion picture story has to take in an immense amount of territory.

After all, the stereotyped picture is mainly a matter of compromise. Ideas, so well worn and so familiar that they will find acceptance by all strata of audiences must be employed. If Mrs. Winter can point out to the producers a route whereby they can emerge from what she calls banality and yet not lose the common touch, her recommendations will be received with enthusiasm.

Miss Garbo's Next

ONE of the most interesting projects of which we have heard for a long time is the choice of Anna Christie as the medium whereby Greta Garbo is to present herself to her first talkie audience.

Eugene O'Neill has written nothing during his long and distinguished career as a dramatist with more power and simplicity than this terrific play. It would seem to be an ideal vehicle for Miss Garbo who has nothing that savors of the wishy-washy in her make-up.

Rough Stuff

A CERTAIN Rabelaisian touch in pictures give a great relief from the Pollyanna bedtime sweetness of a few years ago. The rough vigor of The Big Parade and certain other pictures instantly caught the imagination of the public. They were real, and sincere and vigorous—if, in spots, a trifle offensive to some persons.

There is, however, a great danger in this direction. Aggressive language in the talkies carries a peril that is new. On the stage, the offense is toned down in two ways: by the personality of the player, and by his ability to shade his effects according to his audience. When speech is once imprisoned on a piece of celluloid film, it is there to stay.

Some audiences may like it; some may be offended, but you can't soft pedal the films in Chautauqua and let them go full fling on Broadway.

Bad Babies Arrested

GEORGE SCARBOROUGH, the talkie author and playwright, seems not to be optimistic about the moral status of Hollywood and its immediate surroundings. His play, Bad Babies, which was running at a theater in Los Angeles was so far from chemical purity that police arrested all the players, among them several movie celebrities, including Jobyna Ralston and Arthur Rankin.

Mr. Scarborough, who used to be a detective, says that he gathered the material for the opus in some of the high schools located in the heart of the film capital.

Changed Her Luck

JOBYNA has had nothing but tough luck since she quit Harold Lloyd's company to become a dramatic star. The same thing happened to Marie Mosquini. It must be admitted, however, that being a leading lady of a Harold Lloyd comedy is a task about as heavy as standing guard over the corner of Forty-second and Broadway to prevent stray cows from hooking the taxicabs.

Singing Through

No Paris revue was complete without the gallant, smiling Maurice Chevalier, in the days before he came to America. On a recent visit to his native land, Paris producers made a place for him in their biggest show. Did he fill the bill? Look at the picture and you will realize why this magnetic personality is the idol of thousands of Parisians.

Life with Maurice

By EDWARD R. SAMMIS

¶ From a childhood of poverty, Maurice Chevalier's bubbling, buoyant gayety carried him through a glorious career of song into the very lap of the Goddess Success.

THE secret of Maurice Chevalier's charm, which has made him the idol of France and is fast making him a favorite of American movie-goers, is perhaps more than anything else, a certain bubbling buoyant gayety, as though his life had been all his years what we might wish ours to be, a thing of beauty, without care, without sorrow, without hardship.

Nothing could be farther from the truth.

There is, in Paris, a suburb called Menilmontant. A drab sort of place where dingy buildings, jostling each other for a foothold, shoulder out the sun, lacking even the picturesque squalor of the poorer districts. In Menilmontant, Parisian laboring men, honest, stolid folk, who set great store by the dignity of toil, make their homes.

Life to them is a serious thing, to be taken with a long face. In their households, laughter and song is looked upon as an invention of the devil. Life is a matter of long hours of toil, piling up francs for the sad days of old age.

In such a home, with a long heritage of honest working folk who had never failed in their simple duties, Maurice Chevalier was born.

There was never any question as to his future. He was to be a laboring man. It was the tradition of the family. Already in his school he was forming habits of industry. If he failed in his school work, he was soundly scolded. Idling was not in the working man's tradition. There was no time for dreaming.

WHEN school was out he must hurry home to help around the house. But once a week he was allowed a holiday. He lived for those few hours of happiness.

There was a vaudeville theater in the neighborhood where working men used to take their families. There, of a Saturday afternoon, you could always find the youthful Maurice, sitting high up in the shadows of the gallery, watching with worshipful eyes the cavortings of the actors on the stage. How he longed to be one of them!

On the way home he would dance their dances, sing their songs; he would imitate them around the house—until someone caught him at it. How he, too, would like to be an actor some day—but there was little hope. It would bring disgrace upon the family were he anything but a working man.

MAURICE might have prolonged the years of his school, however, had not a catastrophe come to the family suddenly, when he was only eleven years of age.

His father, the breadwinner for many mouths, suddenly died. There was one older brother. But he was married, and concerned with domestic problems of his own. Upon Maurice, then devolved the responsibility of supporting his mother and his younger brothers and sisters.

At eleven, this happy-go-lucky youth was saddled with the responsibility of a family.

A solemn family council was held.

"Well, Maurice," said the elder brother, "it is time for you to choose a career. You must put the silliness of childhood behind you. You are a man now and must concern yourself with a man's problems. What is it that you want to become?"

Animal life in the Chevalier home consists of one live, but sleepy, puppy; one live, but lazy, turtle; and one animated, but stuffed, poodle dog. Here Maurice is telling his sleepy puppy to "Play dead!" Apparently the pup is not bothered with insomnia.

The little elf of a boy put his hands in his pockets and straightened up.

"I should like to be," he said, "an actor."

Consternation reigned. His brother flew into a rage. Relatives who were present at the council raised their hands in horror. It was shameful, unthinkable, that the son of an honest working man should want to be an actor.

ONLY Maurice's mother dared venture an opinion in support of his ambition. If he wanted to be an actor, why not let him be an actor? But she was overruled. The whole idea was too absurd. They would find honest work for him to do.

And so Maurice was apprenticed to a carpenter.

But Maurice, as a carpenter, was a dismal failure. He sang at his work. Or sat staring over the newly planed boards through the dusty windows.

One day at last the carpenter was aroused to righteous rage.

"Bonehead! Idiot!" he cried, when he discovered Maurice's tenth blunder of the day. "You are good-for-nothing and lazy. Go somewhere else to waste your time!"

And so the youthful breadwinner turned dejectedly home that night with empty pockets.

Another solemn family conclave was held and Maurice was apprenticed to an electrician. But it was the same old story.

Then followed a long succession of jobs—one after another. He became a nailer, he became a painter of dolls, he tried selling paints. But his history repeated itself.

Then one afternoon, he got his chance. There was a contest for amateurs at the theater, with a cash prize. He would try for it. Why not? They needed the money badly at home. He would not need to tell anybody about it.

He borrowed a pair of huge trousers from a neighbor who was a big fellow. He bought some red grease paint and doused his nose with it. He bought a peasant cap and set it at a jaunty angle over one eye, that trick way of wearing his headgear which he has made his very own, which he adopted almost by instinct from the very first. Then he went on and gave an imitation of his favorite who was then the idol of the little neighborhood theater. He was greeted with thunderous applause which was surprising to him.

When the act was over the manager came back-stage and offered him a steady job.

WOULD he come and sing four evenings a week? At the princely sum of three francs an evening? Would he? Of course he would. It was much more money than he had been getting. He ran all the way home to tell the glad news.

But he met severe censure from the family circle. No! They had not had an actor in the family. They would not have one now, certainly. It was a disgraceful trade. Besides, whoever saw an actor well-to-do? They were a penniless, down-at-the-heel crowd, they were! Bah! He must put that out of his mind.

This time, however, his mother took a firm stand against the rest of the family. It was what Maurice had always wanted to do. Now he had a chance to make a living. It was honest work. He should be allowed to try it if he wanted to.

IT WAS the dawn of a new day for Maurice. From that time on, he was never idle for long, never long off the stage which he loved so well. Within a few years he was to have set a vogue in Paris, he was to have his imitators like other artists. But there were heartbreaks and sorrows still in store for him.

For a time all went well. Night after night, the little boy in the big funny pants, and the grotesque red nose and the peasant's cap over one eye would come out and do his song and dance.

And the crowd would go into gales of laughter. Maurice thought they were laughing with him. He fancied himself a great comedian. He strutted and posed among the other actors. He was one of them.

He had never stopped to anaylze the words to the songs he was singing. He had simply memorized them parrot-like, without a thought as to what they meant. They were rough, rowdy, peasant songs, which the big comedian, his idol, had sung.

Then one day one of the other actors told him.

"Maurice," he said, "They are not laughing at you. You need not think yourself so clever. They are laughing because it sounds so funny for a little fellow like you to be boasting of his conquests with women."

Maurice went home that night, broken-hearted, and cried himself to sleep.

Sometimes he would fail to please his audience, those workingmen who knew what they wanted in the way of entertainment. Then he would study to see what was wrong and how he could improve himself.

LITTLE by little he branched out. He added new songs. He went from one neighborhood theater to another. Sometimes he would get fired. Then he would go to another theater and the manager would say, "Well, let us see how you are."

One memorable night after such a tryout, the manager said to him, "Maurice, you are very good." And placed a note in his hands. It was a five-franc piece, worth about a dollar in those days before the war.

He ran all the way home with it.

"Look, mama," he shouted, "I have earned five francs."

His mother was equally excited.

She ran down stairs, three at a time, to show off her son to the caretaker of the little flat where they lived.

"Look," she said, waving the note under the astonished gentleman's nose. "My Maurice has earned a dollar all in one night. Is it not wonderful?"

It meant almost the end of their years of bitter poverty, the years of living on coffee and rolls, of darning old clothes to look like new.

But not quite. There was one more bad stretch ahead.

DURING his career Chevalier has sung and danced in every café, cabaret and place of entertainment in Paris, from the cheapest and the dingiest, to the most celebrated. But only once did he ever do what we call "nickel-snatching" in this country.

"It happened not long after I had earned my dollar for one night's work," he said, "and I thought everything was going to be lovely. Then suddenly, the theater closed and I had no work. This time I could not get another job. I went everywhere. But times were bad. I could get nothing to do. There were many singers and dancers in Paris who would sing and dance on street corners or go into cafés, and then they would pass around the hat and whatever they collected in it would pay them for their entertainment.

"So I went down into a little café in the Montmartre wearing the peasant costume that I wore on the stage. I asked the man if I could sing and dance and pass the hat. He, of course, was glad to get the free entertainment.

"So I did my act the best I could. Then I took off my peasant hat and went around among the tables saying, 'Do you want to give something?' They began to fill it up with coins. But suddenly I felt very much ashamed. I felt a red flush creeping up my neck. Tears came to my eyes. I could hardly keep them back. I felt like I was begging. I ran out of the café, and that night I cried and cried with shame. I decided then and there that even if I starved to death, I could never, never do that again.

"Luckily, I did not have to. Before the money I had earned that night was gone, I had another job. I have always had one since. There has hardly been a day that I have not worked from that time on. But I did not realize that the great success for me was just around the corner."

When another slack period in his engagements came along a few months later, Chevalier received an offer to

Lupe—Mistress

Who is who and which is which? Above, is a very assuming young beauty, Lupe Velez, assuming the form and likeness of Gloria Swanson, while below, is Gloria, herself.

Lupe confesses she is a changeable miss by changing her guise from that of Gloria into that of Dolores Del Rio with startling success that even Dolores, below, must admit.

of Mimicry

Now the versatile Lupe borrows the appearance of Irene Bordoni. So that you will make no mistake, it must be pointed out that the real Miss Bordoni is pictured below.

If Fannie Brice, at the right, could look at the picture above, she would recognize herself, and the imitating Lupe would thrill in her achievement.

If You Look Like Marian

¶ How to act and dress—if you look like Marian Nixon—and would acquire her personality.

Marian Nixon autographs her picture for one of the many girls who are lucky enough to look like this charming little player.

By CLIFFORD RANDALL

THIS year, not yet passed, has brought to Marian Nixon, letters from more than one hundred whose friends have told them:

"Why, you look like Marian Nixon, the screen star."

Thirty-seven of the letters enclosed photographs. Miss Nixon showed them to me and in many cases the resemblances were startling.

"It is said that every man and woman has his or her double in the world," Marian said, as we examined the stack of pictures, some of them large portraits and others snapshots hardly larger than a quarter.

Therefore, as there are so many "Marian Nixons" in this world, it is only just that they be presented with the opportunity to know Marian better; to know her dress, her habits, her likes and dislikes. With this information, girls who look like Marian, may acquire the charming personality that has ever been a most formidable factor in advancing her brilliant career.

ONE of the extremely nice things about Marian is that she is able to blush after so many years in the show business. Many girls become hardened easily, but not Marian. I have known her since she was an extra, and she has never ceased being sweet, refined and lovely during her seven years before the camera.

I might preface this article by saying that Miss Nixon is one of the rare actresses with no double in Hollywood.

Marian Nixon—the girl with light brown hair parted on the left side, rich olive complexion, eyes of soft brown, rather small nose, slightly tilted at the end, and soft and delicately curved lips always ready to part in a most fascinating smile.

There are several girls who resemble Mary Pickford; Marion Davies has her prototypes; many look like Gloria Swanson, and I know of no other actress who has not at least one double living in Hollywood.

Marian could hardly be called beautiful. She is sweet—not saccharine; not too sweet. She is lovely but not old-fashioned. She drinks an occasional highball and wears her skirts short enough to display all of a shapely pair of legs and most of two dimpled knees. Yet, your mother would love Marian.

She is the very slightest fraction of an inch taller than five feet and causes the scales to waver at one hundr and three pounds. Marian's figure is slightly boyish, yet well curved and shapely. Her closest boy friends have described her (and their tones were most respectful) as a "cuddly armful."

Edward Hillman, Jr., is Marian Nixon's choice in husbands—a choice that Marian holds as her's exclusively.

HER hair is light brown and she wears it with a long-bob effect. It is very fine and becomes entirely unmanagable in the wind. Contrary to the usual feminine habits, Marian does not mind its disarray. It is strange that women should be so particular that every strand of hair should be rigidly in place when most men delight in the stray wisps that sneak away to flutter fascinatingly about foreheads or pink ears.

"Bobbed hair is quite becoming to small girls," Marian suggests. "Particularly if the girls are pert and pretty. There is a distinctive freshness about bobbed hair that adapts itself readily to women of small stature."

Miss Nixon parts her hair on the left side, near the center. When she dresses it for evening, the long ends are gathered into two loose rolls at the side. She never wears ornaments or other head dress.

Marian Nixon particularly likes this coat suit of dark blue serge. Lace collar and cuffs plus petite Marian add just the correct touch to make this an altogether charming outfit.

Her complexion is rich olive and her eyes are soft brown. Her lips are soft and delicately curved. They are rich red in color. Her nose is rather small and slightly tilted at the end. She has extremely lovely shoulders, arms, hands and back. In evening gowns, this loveliness is accentuated. She looks at her best when so dressed.

I might explain that Marian owes the beauty of her arms and shoulders to poverty. When she first arrived in Los Angeles as a member of a vaudeville act that stranded in that city, her arms were undeveloped; almost scrawny. Lack of funds necessitated her doing her own laundry. Almost every night, in the tiny room that she rented for four dollars weekly, she washed her clothes. She had to launder often because her garments were so few that skipping a few nights might have left her without clean ones. It was this constant scrubbing and rubbing that developed Marian's arms and shoulders until now they are among her chief attractions.

Evening gowns with tight bodice and full skirts look well on small girls, says Marian, pictured in her favorite gown, a peach-colored affair with bodice of satin, georgette skirt and baby pink ribbons featuring a cascade of flounces. This is a tip well worth following.

SHE makes use of a natural tan, semi-olive complexion powder. To her eyebrows and lashes she applies light brown pencil stick and mascaro sparingly. Her eyebrows are kept closely plucked and end at the temple just even with the outer corners of her eyes. She employs a natural red shade of rouge on her lips.

Warner Brothers studio wardrobe officials and modistes made a statement recently that small girls are more difficult to gown properly than

So This is

DO YOU know," said one Hollywood writer (woman, of course) to another, "that women faint when Rudy Vallee plays the saxophone?"

Charles "Buddy" Rogers was standing near, taking it all in. "That's nothing," he said, "When I appeared in Chicago twelve women fainted."

The two writers were eager to know all about it. Buddy spun them a nice yarn which they eagerly scribbled into note books.

"But," he added, "It would be only fair to tell you that these women who fainted were standing outside on the street in the boiling hot sun waiting for the theater to open."

Giving Wheeler the Bird

FOR years Bert Wheeler's pet hankering was to carry a cane down Broadway—without getting the bird. He ventured spats, he braved the mob in a top hat, but somehow he never could dare a cane.

Then, when he joined the Lambs, that Union League of the stage, the president gave him a swanky stick. He carried it one night. He walked ten blocks. No one even turned around. Then, just as he was passing his own theater, a little newsboy who used to sell him papers, gave him the bird . . . a big bird . . . a loud bird. Wheeler turned and glared. The urchin glared back. And gave him the bird again . . . and said: "And I mean you!"

The stick the president of the Lambs Club gave Bert Wheeler has been resting in the bottom of his trunk ever since.

Pets: Keep Out

LUPE VELEZ is faced with a perplexing problem. She is about to move from her home in Laurel Canyon to take a larger house in Beverly Hills. But it seems that the lawmakers of Beverly Hills were not in sympathy with pets and made a lot of rules forbidding them the hospitality of the city.

Lupe isn't worried about Erik, the largest Great Dane at large, nor Meel-a-tone, the tiniest Chihuahua in captivity, nor the angora kitten, but she doesn't quite know what to do about the rabbits or the eagles. The two eagles which Gary Cooper gave her have a large cage in the front yard, and although they gobble raw meat with relish, when Lupe comes into the cage they are as docile as doves. She has become very much attached to them and does not want to leave them, especially as there are about to be some little eaglets in the family.

"My rabbits do not have any baby

"Yeh," sourly. "And after that he went bad."

Stole a March On Himself

JACK BENNY, who is gaining a wide reputation as a master of ceremonies for the talkies, remarked the other day that he knew of an absent-minded song writer who stole one of his own songs and sold it to a rival publisher.

Locating for Shooting

W. S. VAN DYKE, director, and Harry Carey, actor, aren't confining all their time to shooting the screen version of Trader Horn, in the wilds of Africa. According to messages received at M-G-M both have shot several water buffalo and a number of crocodiles, while Van Dyke bagged a hippopotamus.

For Youngsters Only

MR. AND MRS. JAMES GLEASON, who are writing and acting in pictures alone and together, and whose son, Russell, has recently entered the field to add to the glory of the family name, are known as the champion story tellers of Hollywood. One of theirs is a cat story.

It seems that when they were living in the East, neighbors of theirs had a cat named Charlie Young. The neighbor cat paid court to the Gleason's cat, who in due time became the mother of four kittens. So the Gleasons sent out frantic requests for names for the four progeny of Mrs. Young. Out of the returns they gathered together the following names for the kittens: Clara Kimball, Rida Johnson, Brigham, and Only the Good Die.

When Politicians Battle

THERE was one vacancy over on the Warner Brothers lot. Two rather important officials each had a friend he wished to place. Each was busy pulling all strings. Only one could win. One did win. The other said, "There's two damn much politics going on around here. That's the trouble."

Lucky Dog!

PHILLIPS HOLMES has a pet dog of which he is very fond. One night he took the dog to a party with him. A charming young lady seized the young canine in her arms.

"What an adorable dog. Do you always take him to parties with you?"

"Yes," said Holmes. "It's no trouble. Some girl always takes a fancy to him and takes care of him all evening."

So This is Hollywood

Jacques Feyder, noted French director, shows Greta Garbo the unusual angle he is setting for a scene in her new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer starring production, which is as yet untitled. Rather a-cute angle, whichever way you want to look at it.

"Sic him, Pat!" encourages Mrs. George Lewis, urging her wire-haired terrier into battle to uphold his reputation.

A Broad Discussion

LEW CODY and Norman Kerry were standing in front of the studio when a pretty little girl passed by.

Kerry: Cute little broad, eh? Pardon me for interrupting you.

Cody: Oh, that's all right. I'm broad minded, too.

A Volley from Cannon

DIRECTOR RAY CANNON struggled for the better part of one morning with an extra who had been mistakenly entrusted with a "bit."

Lunching at the Munchers that noon, he remarked to a fellow director: "That girl is so dumb she'd have to study to be a moron!"

Now Boyds!

WHICH Boyd will win? William Boyd, a star of the stage, has come out to United Artists. William Boyd, screen actor, is already at Pathé.

"Change my name? I should say not! William Boyd was the name of my father and my grandfather; they were both actors. Besides, I'm a little older," ejaculated the stage actor.

"Change my name! How can I? It's the only one by which my fans know me," says the movie actor.

There's threats of lawsuits and injunctions. All they lack are legal grounds for action.

Increasing the Kiss Rate

KISSES have to be lengthened on the screen.

The reason is this: Silent pictures used to be photographed at the rate of 60 feet of film per minute and projected at 90 feet a minute; talking pictures have to be photographed and projected at the same rate—thus requiring one-third more film than heretofore used.

A Telephone Mixup

FOR the benefit of fans who might come to Hollywood in the future and wish to telephone their favorite movie star, I want to say that movie stars are not listed in the general telephone directory. So if you run your finger down the alphabetically arranged names and find such a name don't dial that number.

This is what happened in the case of Betty Compson. A fan, wishing to call her, consulted the directory and found listed a certain Betty Compson. He dialed the number and was surprised to hear a man answer. He asked for Miss Compson, explaining he was an admirer of hers.

"So, you're the man who has been calling my Betty?" the bass voice on the other end of the wire was anything but pleasant. "If I ever get my hands on you I'll scalp you."

And it was some time before his friends could persuade the fan that James Cruze was not out looking for him with a knife.

Quite So

SMOKE belched from the windows of a cutting room on the First National lot.

Bill Beaudine, the director, and his assistant were passing along the street.

"Must be cutting another Alice White picture," remarked Bill. "There's nothing else on the lot hot enough to cause a fire."

And Bill was right. The flames broke out while the cutters were at work on Alice's The Girl from Woolworths.

Sutherland's Subtle Escape

EDWARD SUTHERLAND, young picture director over on the Paramount lot, is receiving an abundance of telephone calls lately. He couldn't understand why people wanting to work in his picture should call him instead of the casting office. Finally he asked one of the aspirants why she called him.

"Oh, Mr. Sutherland," she said, "I read in the paper where you said that if a person's voice registered well over the telephone it would also register in talking pictures."

Sutherland was stopped. He really had made such a statement. After a minute's hesitation, he said, "I make it a practice never to believe anything I hear."

Talkies Will Open Rudy's Eyes

RUDY VALLEE, upon his arrival in Hollywood, was surrounded with reporters, all asking nonsensical questions at once. One reporter asked, "Tell me, Mr.

So This is Hollywood

"Huh! My dog is better than yours," loyally retorts George Lewis, athletic young Universal star, as he releases his ferocious looking English bulldog for the canine battle.

Vallee, why you always sing with your eyes shut?"
"That," said Mr. Vallee, "is because I am sensitive, and when someone in the audience rewards my efforts by placing his thumb up to his nose, I have no way of knowing it."

Educating the Movies

CHUCK REISNER, director, is responsible for this one: The producers have heard "the movies are in their infancy" for so long that they finally believed it and taught them to talk!

Estelle Tells This One

TOLD by Estelle Taylor who heard it some place or other. It seems a beauty contest winner had been given her first part. It was in a western drama. She was to be a rodeo queen, and for the purpose of the story had to whoop it up in the tanbark ring. Everything was fine, save that the girl knew less about horseflesh than an honest butcher.

She went to an academy to learn how to sit on a mount.

"Will you have an English or a western saddle, miss?" the groom asked.

"Wha-what's the difference?"

"Well, miss, the English is a flat saddle, and the western has a horn."

"Oh, yes. Yes, indeed. Well, I don't need the horn, because I'm not going to ride in traffic."

A Weaker Man Would Flop

TROUBLE is," said Cliff (Ukelele Ike) Edwards on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sound stage, "that every time an electrician throws a spotlight in my face I automatically take a bow!"

Sharing His Acquaintance

HERBERT CLARK, one of the Broadway newcomers, was sitting in his broker's office, watching the board. He chanced to mention that he was in the movies.

"What company are you with?" a strange woman next to him inquired.

"Pathé."

Fair flowers of cinemaland—Colleen Moore and one of the dahlias which an amateur horticulturist named after her, and which won two prizes in the Los Angeles Dahlia show.

She rose, walked over to the desk and ordered a hundred shares of Pathé. And the next day she lunched at the Montmartre with him. A new way of meeting an actor.

Extra Words Barred

EXTRA people, when required to carry on a conversation, cannot tell their fellow workers what they'd like to do to the director any more. A smile will cover up any such drastic remarks as far as the camera is concerned—but, there's all those detestable little mikes around telling tales out of school. Josef Von Sternberg, smilingly warns his extras, "Anything you say may be heard against you."

Rin Tin Tin Preferred

AL JOLSON is proud of Davey Lee and likes to "show him off" to visitors. One day he said, in such an exhibition, "Who do you like to sing with, Davey?"

"You, uncle Al," lisped Davey.

"And who do you like to play in pictures with, Davey?" uncle Al continued.

"Rin Tin Tin," said Davey.

Digging Up the Past

FIVE men were surrounding one table in the Paramount Studio Café. They were talking in low voices, heads together, very nervous and very excited. A visitor at a nearby table asked his host, a production manager, who the men were.

"Oh, they think they are writers. Last night they brought in a great story. It was a great story but we had made the picture as least five years ago. Now they have to think up another."

An Airy Chap, Indeed

LEW AYRES a newcomer to the screen who will appear in Greta Garbo's forthcoming picture to be directed by Clarence Brown, started life as Lewis Ayres. He was asked why he changed his name.

"Try it yourself," he said. "If you don't get loose air out of it I'll eat my shirt."

A Voice for the Singies

TITO RUFFO is the latest operatic star to succumb to the lure of the talkies. He has broken his Metropolitan Opera Company contract, and is on his way to Hollywood to appear in Carmen for Warner Brothers.

Bread-and-Butter Man

HOWARD HUGHES, who has spent $3,000,000 and two years in the filming of Hell's Angels, finally has won a place in the cinema sun.

Wilson Mizner, Hollywood wit, pointed out the young producer as he Rolls-Royced down the boulevard. Said Mizner:

"There goes God's gift to the extras."

When Lovers Part

LUPE VELEZ and Gary Cooper have come to a parting of the ways. But it's only temporary. If you had been able to see them when she left for the South to make a picture in a natural location, you'd have thought they were parting forever instead of for several weeks. Miss Velez and Cooper are Hollywood's most interesting romancers and everything they do is watched with interest.

Preparedness Pockets

PATSY RUTH MILLER GARNETT was displaying a nightgown presented her by Lila Lee at the shower given her after her wedding. "What are the pockets for, Patsy," someone asked, pointing to the tiny lace pockets adorning each side. "Why, for mad money," was Pat's quick rejoinder.

A doggy affair—Bobby, talented terrier of vaudeville, acts as waiter when Buster and Brownie, leading "men" in M-G-M's all-canine drama, "Hot-Dogs," entertain Sally Starr and Mary Doran at luncheon.

A dog-trot a day keeps the doctor away, thinks Buddy Rogers, who takes his daily run, with his dog setting the pace. It's a doggy way to keep healthy.

Burned Beyond Recognition

LON CHANEY returned to M-G-M following a vacation in the mountains.

"The only trouble is that I got so sunburned that nobody knew me," he said.

"In fact, he singed all thousand of his faces," commented a friend who was standing nearby.

Beauty for Sale

MANY Hollywood girls are going into business in a big way. The latest is Kathleen Clifford, who has formed a cosmetic company to operate a chain of beauty shops.

Betty Compson's Hotel

BETTY COMPSON has just announced plans for the construction of a $6,000,000 tourist hotel. Miss Compson has dreamed all her life of just such an undertaking, so is entering enthusiastically into all sorts of architectural problems.

Ben Lyon's Ambition

BEN LYON got a hankering to be a flyer during the making of Hell's Angels, started more than two years ago by Howard Hughes. Now Ben is a full-fledged flyer. But he isn't satisfied with that. He wants a transport license.

As a result of which, the secret why Ben can never be found at home on Sundays has been discovered. He can be found any Sunday at an airport near Hollywood taking up flapper passengers. He does it without cost to the company so that he can get sufficient hours in the air to get a license. And the company is doing a land office business.

A Strong Voice

POLLY MORAN threatened to sing Sonny Boy in the Blossom Room of the Hollywood-Roosevelt Hotel. As she blew out several tubes singing it for The Hollywood Revue of 1929 the management suggested she refrain from singing it.

Now It's Parlor Golf

MARION DAVIES has a new hobby. It is parlor golf, a novel innovation brought out from New York by Donald Ogden Stewart, noted humorist. The game is

And This is Paris!

¶ A department telling just what goes on among famous members of the American film colony while they are sojourning in Gay Paree.

Comtesse de Chilly-Rumford

PARIS, FRANCE

MAURICE CHEVALIER and his wife, Yvonne Vallée, were fairly mobbed when they reached the Gare St. Lazare.

Maurice is enthusiastic about the charms of American girls—his wife less so! But trust a Frenchwoman for taking care of herself! Madame Chevalier arrived, bearing in her arms, "Adolphe," a dog given her by Adolphe Menjou.

A reporter friend of mine who went all the way to Havre to meet them, hoping for a word alone with Maurice, discovered that about a hundred other newspaper men had the same bright idea. Solitude with the idol! They could hardly see him at first, among the two thousand arrivals streaming down the gangway from the Ile de France. But Maurice finally became visible; decidedly sunburned, smiling with that grown-up-kid charm of his, but with actual tears in his eyes at sight of his beloved native land.

Maurice reports Hollywood alive and talking, but says that Charlie Chaplin has gone off into a dream. After eight days in his little grey home in Provence, Chevalier's "rest" must be found on the stage of the Empire, where it is said he is to receive twenty thousand francs per night. Then—back to Hollywood where the dollars grow, where money talks turkey! Where you can really hear the silver eagle screen.

LILY DAMITA, that Hollywood Parisienne, made as big a hit in her home town as if she were all-American. Cela n'est pas peu dire! Newspapers pictured her asking her way of Paris policemen like a bona fide tourist.

In her pretty apartment near the Etoile, she laughed prettily over her reception at home. "One can breathe here," said Lily. "Hollywood is marvelous, and I'll be delighted to go back when my vacation is over. But what terrific work they expect of you in America! From eight in the morning till late in the night! You hardly have time to snatch a few sandwiches for lunch."

She was naïvely proud of the fact that she spoke English in The Cock-eyed World. "I've become quite polyglot," she said. "I can talkie five languages fairly well, now!"

Tamar Lane, one of the very first critics to foresee the possibilities of Gloria Swanson when she was a seventeen-year-old beginner, predicts great things for Lily Damita. May this prediction come true! Lily has gone back to Hollywood now, to work.

WHILE I write, Paris is a tip-toe for the long heralded arrival of Doug and Mary. We hear on this side, that Doug is bidding a final farewell to pictures!

In Paris, however, we've learned not to believe American rumors too soon. Take Bessie Love, for instance! Ever since her accident we've been "hearin' things at night." First, that she was hideously scarred and could never screen again. Next, that she was hardly scratched at all, and is already at work on a picture, her undamaged looks more fascinating than ever. Before we finished rejoicing over that, a Belgian scribe announces her death. But his letter reached Paris at the same time as a letter from Bessie herself, declaring that she is still going strong.

Maurice Chevalier and his wife, Yvonne Vallee, were given one of the greatest ovations on record in the French capital when the idol of the boulevards recently returned to France for a visit to his beloved Paree.

LILLIAN GISH accomplished a miracle! Of course she did it while the weather was hot, with many news-hounds out of town on vacation. But it was a miracle, nevertheless. She passed a fortnight in Paris unperceived, and thumbed her nose at the press (charmingly) when she departed. When Lillian wants a rest, she wants a REST. This time, she put one over on the public, and got it!

LET Hollywood and Parisian stars rejoice in the towns they inhabit! From Poland word comes that Joseph Rosen has been filming exteriors at Ttchew and Hel.

WHILE Jacques Feyder is turning a film in Hollywood for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, his wife is enjoying a visit home to Paris. In her pretty apartment near the Pont de l'Alma, she talks about America. We were hoping her gifted husband-director would pay Paris a visit soon, but she says he can't leave Hollywood at present.

The BOY She

In all the history of the screen there has been no more beautiful romance than the love of Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell. Now she has married another, and Charles, heart-broken, looks into the future and tries to forget the girl he lost.

Left Behind

By BOB MOAK

¶ Janet Gaynor turned a cold shoulder on the enraptured Charles Farrell and walked right out of his life on the arm of Lydell Peck, a millionaire attorney, who won his suit.

IN ALL the history of the silversheet there have never been two lovers more ideally suited, more rapturous in their worship of one another, than Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell.

In their celluloid romances, their love has thrilled millions by finally surmounting the obstacles and misunderstandings that intervened, enabling them to "live happily ever after."

And that is as it should be in the perfect realm of the imagination, but in real life, things often work out differently.

Wedding bells have just rung—for Janet. Kissing her husband with the joy of a great love, she has walked down the gangplank to embark on her honeymoon of happiness. However, that happiness does not include Charlie Farrell.

Janet was married to Lydell Peck, San Francisco and Oakland millionaire, to whom she has been rumored engaged at various times for more than two years.

While the ceremony was taking place at the Peck mansion in Oakland, Charlie was speeding Eastward, looking into the night from the platform of the observation car as a trans-continental limited put the miles between Janet and himself. Charlie was trying, alas! unsuccessfully, to forget.

They may meet again, Janet and Charlie, but it will be simply on the basis of the good friendship they have always held for one another.

To this tragic ending has come one of the most touching off-stage heart affairs that ever involved a pair of cinema players.

JANET and Charlie were in love, long before their names were known to the world. They probably didn't admit it, or maybe they didn't realize it back four years ago when both were extras and Charlie used to treat Janet to an ice cream soda at the corner drug store in the evening after work.

There are lots of us in Hollywood who knew them when—when they were more worried over the problem of earning $7.50 the next day than they were about marriage.

Had the producers cast two unacquainted people for the leading rôles of Seventh Heaven, instead of these two sweethearts, that picture would never have been the box-office success it turned out to be. Camera love was re-enforced by real love in those scenes in the attics of Paris.

Perhaps the rest of the universe wondered as the story unfolded. But Hollywood didn't have to guess. It knew about Janet and Charlie.

After Seventh Heaven, Hollywood understood that they were engaged and that they would wed as soon as their careers were assured.

Happy newlyweds! Mr. and Mrs. Lydell Peck, as they appeared before tripping gaily up the gangplank of their honeymoon steamer, bound for romance land, Honolulu.

Then it was that Lydell Peck, son of a wealthy lawyer, himself a member of the bar and manager of his parent's vast legal and business interests, came into the life of Janet.

JANET and Charlie had had a "spat." Janet had gone to Berkeley to attend a football game. That night she was the guest of honor at a victory party given by a University of California fraternity. Peck was there.

Gary Cooper's

¶ The strong, silent youth from ideal girl—if he could find her! the girl of his dreams.

"I would not lead any girl to the altar until I was sure she was the one with whom I could be happy for the balance of my life," declares Gary Cooper. "There will be but one Mrs. Gary Cooper."

—Ball.

Gloria Swanson's mouth, teeth and chin are much admired by Gary. She possesses, too, the dazzling smile of his dream lady.

Evelyn Brent's fiery spirit attracts Gary to the extent that he lists her temperament as part of his ideal.

FEMININE admirers of Gary Cooper — and their number is legion—can breathe easily once again. The lanky, sad-eyed lad from the Western plains is very fond of Lupe Velez, but he does not intend to marry her—at least so he says.

Instead, the gates to Gary's heart some day will swing open to admit the love of a beautiful and typically American girl. She is the lady of Gary's dreams.

Gary carries about with him a very clear mental picture of the future Mrs. Cooper.

She is a brunette with hair like that of Lupe.
She has the eyes of Greta Garbo.
She has the nose of Nancy Carroll.
She has the mouth and teeth and chin of Gloria Swanson.
She is neither tall not short, fleshy nor thin.
And she is of fiery temperament.

GARY described this dream girl to me as we sat beneath the natural oaks that shade the big Lasky ranch, forty miles from Hollywood, where Paramount was shooting exteriors for The Virginian. It was the day that Gary's superiors informed him that he was to be elevated from featured rôles into full-fledged stardom!

Only a few months before, an overly-enthusiastic press agent took it upon himself to announce the engagement of Gary and Lupe. Then the storm broke.

Thousands of letters poured in to Gary from all corners of the globe. They were protests from his fans who just couldn't convince themselves that this big, silent he-boy from the wide-open spaces, and the cinema's Mexican madcap were mated.

Questioned by newspaper reporters at the time, Lupe had admitted that it was true that she and Gary were betrothed. Gary, on the other hand, neither confirmed nor denied. But, then, it is well to remember that Gary is a gentleman—first, last and always.

It was during our chat that day on the ranch that I discovered that Gary and Lupe were playmates in playtown, and nothing more. And that wasn't all I found out.

THERE has been but one love in Gary's life, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding. He "fell" for her twenty years ago, when he was a ten-year-old youngster dreaming day-dreams on his father's ranch in Montana.

Time has brought some changes in Gary's phantom lady, but they are not great changes, Gary assured me.

She still is basically the dream girl of two decades ago!

Gary can't give you any reason for being partial to Lupe's hair other than that it is black. He does, however, approve of the way she dresses it.

But in the eyes of Greta Garbo, he finds something meaningful. They are the eyes of the dreamer, the artiste, —Louise.

Greta Garbo's eyes are meaningful. They are the eyes of the dreamer, the artiste; they reflect an alluring promise of deep mentality.

—Richee.

Nancy Carroll's nose is just right, says Gary. In his dream girl he hopes to find just such delicate expression and charm.

Will Lupe Velez some day be Mrs. Gary Cooper? He says, "No!"— while in the next breath he declares, "She is interesting, never monotonous"—truly a recipe for an endless happy marriage!

he believes. They reflect a mentality that is deep.

Nancy Carroll's nose is just right, in his estimation. It is neither flat nor sharp. It would, he holds, add to the beauty of any face.

"Doll-faced" girls with tiny mouths have no appeal for this new luminary in the celluloid heavens. Gloria Swanson's mouth reveals character, he said. Incidentally, he considers her's the perfect teeth.

Gloria's chin expresses character.

WITHOUT having met Gloria Swanson, one can tell by her chin that she has a will of her own," Gary declared, "and I don't believe you will find anyone who knows her real well who will not tell you she is anything but a 'yes girl.' "

While Gary stands six feet, two inches in height, he does not like tall girls.

"My ideal, as I see her, is about five feet, two or three inches," he said, "and while it is pretty hard to put a dream girl on the scales, I think she weighs about 115 to 120 pounds."

Gary's ideal, as near as I can figure her after listening to his description, is an angel morally, but a devil mentally.

I HAVE no use for the clinging-vine type of girl who constantly 'yesses' her boy-friend or husband," he confided. "My ideal is very much like my favorite horse—temperamental, and when she decides to have her own way, she has it. She is spirited and has a strong will of her own.

"The girl I shall marry enjoys auto trips, horse-back riding, hunting and fishing—in fact, anything that will keep her out in the open. Not that it would be necessary for financial reasons, but I would prefer that she be able to cook. She loves her home to such an extent that she will, at least, see to it that the servants keep it in order.

"My dream girl is well educated, although not necessarily a college graduate. She has been reared by intelligent and right-thinking parents. She is interested in good books. Possibly she plays the piano or sings."

Gary does not believe that a career ruins a girl for matrimony. He says he may even find his dream girl within the ranks of his own profession. "However," he added, "I would want my wife to give up her work if it were going to force us to live apart. Separation after marriage does not tend toward happiness. Both husband and wife develop interests that they cannot hold in common when they are parted for any length of time."

Gary looks upon marriage in a serious light.

"I would not lead any girl to the altar until I was sure she was the one with whom I could be happy for the balance of my life," he declared. "I do not believe in easy marriage and easy divorce. There will be but one Mrs. Gary Cooper."

Win a Free Trip

NESTLED neatly in the California foothills, is Hollywood — gorgeous city of glitter and grandeur.

Open wide the gates of magic Hollywood! There are three free trips to this California wonderland waiting for you and you and you!

Merely write a letter—in 500 words or less—entitled "What a trip to First National Pictures Studio would mean to me."

A knowledge of the motion picture business or of anything connected with the profession of acting is not necessary. It is not necessary that you have ever been to California or have ever seen Hollywood. Give in your own words, an intimate word-picture of what this glorious trip would mean to you—write your own intimate opinions—thoughts best expressed, not fancy English, will count most. Write your letter on one side of the paper only, preferably on a typewriter. Letters must be postmarked not later than January 10, 1930.

CAPTAIN ROSCOE FAWCETT, editor of SCREEN SECRETS, will head the board of judges, working with Hal Wallis and G. Baker, First National executives, and Alice White, the popular motion picture star, in deciding which letters best express what a trip to Movies' fairyland, under the auspices of First National Pictures and SCREEN SECRETS, would mean to the reader.

Once in Hollywood, the winners will be received by a committee headed by Mr. Wallis and Mr. Baker and composed of these famous stars: Richard Barthelmess, Billie Dove, Dorothy Mackaill, Jack Mulhall, and Alice White.

Miss Dove's Rolls-Royce will be at the disposal of the winners during their entire time in Hollywood.

Imagine the exhilarating pleasure of hobnobbing with your favorites! Lunching with Corinne Griffith! Romping on the beach with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.! Riding with Jack Mulhall along Hollywood's bridle paths! Yachting with Dick Barthelmess! Dancing with Dorothy Mackaill! Motoring with Alexander Gray! Playing tennis with Lila Lee! Enjoy all the pleasures of Hollywood, experience the thrills of seeing motion pictures made, watch the action behind the scenes—revel to the full for one glorious week in America's wonderland!

CORINNE GRIFFITH, "the orchid of the screen", will greet you in Hollywood! And you will meet such old-time favorites as Milton Sills, Alice Joyce, Lois Wilson, Constance Bennett and Noah Beery, as well as these youngsters, who best typify the era of new faces: Loretta Young, Sally Eilers, James Ford, Carroll Nye and Roland Young. There will be Irene Bordoni, Marilyn Miller and Joe E. Brown, fresh in the talkies from stage triumphs on Broadway.

But meeting the stars in person will not be all the fun in these trips to Hollywood! In your trip through the studios, you will see mammoth productions in the making, you will watch the gorgeous choruses in musical extravaganzas caper and kick their twinkling toes for a picture that several months later will be rocking the nation. You will watch the stars as they pose before the cameras, gesturing and speaking for the benefit of camera lens and microphone—and you will understand why they call it "work".

And there will be a veritable fairyland of oddities throughout the studio lots—artists' quarters, carpenter shops, song writers' bungalow colonies, property rooms, libraries, school rooms for juvenile actors.

You will see the things and the people which go to make up the movie industry, the "behind the scenes" part you have never heard about.

to Hollywood!

Billie Dove, Edmund Lowe and Norman Selby chuckle at Cissie Fitzgerald's comedy antics, while Director Millard Webb visualizes how she will fit into the script, on the set in a First National production. This is one of the sights you'll see when you go behind the scenes during your visit in Hollywood.

ADDITIONAL prizes there are for those who do not win a trip to Hollywood.

Billie Dove will give her own wrist watch to the young lady who achieves fourth place. Jack Mulhall will give his strap watch to the young man equally fortunate. And to the next ten prize winners will be given a set of eight stars' autographed portraits, pictured on pages 44 and 45.

How to Win

All of you will want to win one of the three vacations in moviedom. You'll have a week in Hollywood, with your hotel bill, meals, transportation and entertainment all paid for by SCREEN SECRETS. Your railroad fare, a round trip ticket, will be supplied, no matter where in the United States you live. A chaperon will accompany the party to Hollywood. And now, how to win!

First National Pictures joined this contest to make you more familiar with its stars and its pictures. Your letter should give your reasons for wishing to visit the First National studios, and not your reasons for wanting to see Hollywood. If you have some favorite star among the First National players, you might start your letter by telling why you'd like to see her, and you'll be surprised to find your letter, once begun, will be easy to write. That's just a suggestion, of course. Imagine you are actually going to visit the First National lot, and are writing your dearest friend about what you expect to see there, and why it will be such a wonderful experience.

"I'd be delighted!" responded Billie Dove, when asked if she would give her wrist watch as fourth prize in the mammoth First National Pictures—SCREEN SECRETS contest.

Don't make your letter very long. Don't submit it in fancy boxes, or painted on a fan, or decorated in any way. It's the letter itself that counts. Write your name and address plainly on the letter, not just on the envelope. Then it won't be lost. No letters will be returned.

What Happens If You Win

Watch for radio announcements and newspaper advertisements regarding the contest. Next month more details will be published in SCREEN SECRETS Magazine. The contest closes at midnight, January 10, 1930. Address your letters to First National Pictures—SCREEN SECRETS Contest Editor, Fawcett Publications, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

"The right time to enter First National Pictures—SCREEN SECRETS' big contest is right now," says Jack Mulhall. "And you can have my own strap watch if you finish fourth."

A Pictorial History of SUE CAROL

¶ Pictures that reveal the story of vivacious Sue Carol from her early childhood days until her glorious triumph as one of the most charming young celebrities.

Charlie Chaplin little realized that he was enjoying the company of a future screen star on the occasion of Sue Carol's first visit to Hollywood when she was eleven years old. It was during this visit that Sue determined to choose a motion picture career, and several years later, she returned to Hollywood and obtained her first screen role in "Is Zat So?"

Sue, at the age of six years. It was at this time that Sue and Janet Gaynor were neighbors in Chicago. They were separated later when Sue attended Kemper Hall Convent at Kenosha, Wisconsin, but their friendship continued even after Janet entered pictures.

The daughter of wealthy Chicago parents who opposed her desire to enter movies, Sue, when she was eighteen years old, had to attend National Park Seminary, a finishing school at Washington, D. C., before she obtained their consent. While there, she frequently appeared in amateur theatricals, preparing for the screen.

Why should Edward Everett Horton marry, when he is so adept at fire-escape get-a-ways? Rita Carewe is the obliging wife who holds her silence while her screen husband, George De Main, reads the paper. And, out the window Horton must go.

Don't Get Married!

¶ Why the wise man never enters into the bounds of matrimony, as related to Gordon R. Silver.

By EDWARD EVERETT HORTON

LAY-DEES and gentlemen! The subject of my little lecture to you today is: Don't Get Married!

Now that the boos, groans and hisses have somewhat subsided, I will repeat—DON'T GET MARRIED!

Ah, do I hear little Gwendolyn in the third row back, asking, "why not?" A reasonable query, my child, quite reasonable. The answer is—because you'll probably live to regret it. That is, if you are of the great majority. And you very likely are.

Mind you, I'm not against marriage itself. I think it's a grand institution, only that's the trouble—it's too much like living in an institution! Say, who threw that tomato?

Continuing and coming down to personal cases, why I am not married seems to be the one great hue and cry of all my fans. Yes, all two of them.

In the first place, I'm not at all sure I've ever asked anyone to marry me. And in the second place, I feel quite sure no one has ever asked me to marry her!

Not that I don't like the feminine half of the world—far from it. But there is a big gap between liking and reaching the marrying stage! But let's not argue about it now. I'm even willing to put it this way—all women are so lovable that, personally, I wouldn't want to make any particular one of them otherwise than lovable by marrying her!

Are my ears deceiving me or do I actually hear applause? Ah, yes, thank you! Thank you! Thank you!

BUT, going on, why should I marry, anyhow?

I have three houses, including a pretty good ranch out in the San Fernando Valley, and three jolly old dogs and two cats to welcome me home. I adore children, but I have four little nephews and two nieces, any or all of which I am at perfect liberty to borrow any time I feel like it. I have a mother, two brothers and a sister.

Marilyn's Sally

Marilyn Miller, whose twinkling toes and golden notes made her the brightest light of the Gay White Way, watches the transformation of her Sally into a gorgeous screen spectacle.

By BURNS BRADLEY

Above is the Marilyn Miller of today while, at the right, is pictured the Marilyn Miller who, at the age of sixteen, sped across the stage in bewildering steps to thundering applause in her Broadway debut.

Jack Pickford and his wife, Marilyn, Miller, spent many happy days at Jack's Hollywood home. This picture was taken just before Marilyn left for New York to star in "Peter Pan"—and just before they decided upon a separation which was followed by a Paris Divorce.

A GENTLE melancholy possessed Marilyn Miller as she sat at the edge of the vast indoor garden at the First National-Vitaphone studio, where one of the scenes for Sally was being made.

For the Hollywood transformation was in process—the movies were changing a great stage success into a motion picture with the usual lavish touch, and what would be a pretty scene behind Broadway footlights was becoming a spectacle, gorgeous beyond the dreams of a John Murray Anderson.

And sadly, Marilyn Miller, whose twinkling toes and lyric voice had won her fame in Sally, looked on.

"It isn't my baby," she said to me. "Sally has grown up—I hardly know her!"

She was right. Marilyn must have felt the pang a mother experiences when she first realizes her baby had blossomed into maturity.

Sally, as one of the most sucessful stage offerings of recent times, was her child. She had played the title rôle behind Broadway footlights night after night for years. She lived that part so long that it seemed to have become a very part of her—it was a cherished offspring of her art.

But, now, it had grown up. Sally was being transferred to the silver sheet—to be seen and heard in all the glory and splendor that any motion picture mind could devise.

When the celluloid Sally finds its way into the theaters of the land, new plaudits will pour into the ears of its star—this beautiful and talented Marilyn. First National has spent more than a million dollars to film this colorful and tuneful production. The result is hailed by those who have viewed it in the studio projection rooms, as the most magnificent of the new talking-singing productions.

BUT, in this, Marilyn finds no solace. With all the immenseness and grandeur of the picturization of Sally, she still isn't happy. Perhaps her feelings are akin to those of the downcast mother who realizes when her child matures that she belongs less to herself and more to the world.

Grows Up

"I guess maybe it is the vast change from the footlights to the kliegs," Marilyn said that day she dropped the tear. "The stage, not the studio, is more my place. I've been there so long and the two lives offer such contrasts."

"Perhaps it's the applause?" I suggested.

"That has something to do with the way I feel," she replied, "but that isn't all. There is something about looking out over the audience, with their changing expressions of approval or disapproval, that drives the artist on to greater things."

But you must know more of her to understand the real Marilyn; to appreciate why she so dearly loves the stage—feels herself to be a part of it.

Virtually all the days of Marilyn's life have been in the atmosphere of the stage. Her parents were in vaudeville, and the backstage region of many a theater was a scene in the earliest days of Marilyn. A coincidence of those days is the fact that Marilyn had a habit of going to dressing-room doors, knocking, and then announcing herself as "Sally", for it was years later that that name was again to play a part in her life, making her the highest salaried musical comedy star on Broadway.

Marilyn's role in "Peter Pan" proved that she was a dramatic actress as well as a dancer and singer. On the left is Alexander Gray, also of Broadway musical comedy fame, who is Marilyn's leading man in the screen version of "Sally."

AT THE age of four, Marilyn made her stage début, doing a toe dance in an act that included her mother, Carol Reynolds of vaudeville fame, her two sisters and her step-father, Caro Miller. Strangely enough, it was the movies that taught her that dance. Her instinct towards dancing was awakened when she saw a child doing a toe dance in a motion picture. Returning home she began imitating the girl in the picture and soon she had perfected the routine.

The later famous star of Sally was a child in her early teens when she reached Broadway. Steadily she had improved her dance and had become more in demand in the larger cities, but the New York child labor law blocked her entrance to Broadway. It was not until she was sixteen that her dream was realized and the Gay White Way obtained its first glimpse of her as a toe dancer—and capitulated to her irresistible charm.

Marilyn was an instantaneous success. Starred by Zeigfeld in Sally with Leon Errol and Walter Catlett, she became the most famous musical comedy star in the world. There was and is a remarkable appeal about her that compels enthusiastic approval. It was clearly demonstrated by the HURRY, they're closing the doors! We are just getting in on time! Betty was already half-way up the steps of St. James Church. We were just going to see Patsy Ruth Miller become Mrs. Tay Garnett.

As we entered the church, two handsome ushers stepped forward, John Farrow offered Betty his arm, while Patsy Ruth's brother, Winston, proffered his to me.

"The bride's side, or the groom's?" he asked.

I chose the bride's, so we soon found ourselves seated in the same row with May McAvoy and Maurice Cleary, her new husband.

"Doesn't May look well?" whispered Betty. "That soft green outfit, with the blonde fur on it, is certainly becoming." Betty was in her glory. "Oh," she exclaimed, "There's Laura La Plante and William Seiter.

It was a very impressive wedding procession that we witnessed. First, the ushers came down in twos, followed by Mrs. Darryl Zanuck (Virginia Fox), Lois Wilson, Lila Lee, the bridesmaids, and Helen Ferguson, maid of honor.

ALL eyes turned on Patsy Ruth, who was leaning on the arm of her father. Her dress was of ivory satin, made princesse fashion, while her train fell from a close-fitting cap of Point d'Angleterre lace. She carried gardenias and valley-lilies.

After the impressive ceremony, the couple hurriedly slipped out of the church, and sped to the bride's home, where the reception was to be held.

"Look, there's Lilyan Tashman," Betty murmured, as we entered the house. "Isn't that brown outfit the smartest one here, though? Don't you just love that cream-printed border on the deep brown, and her little scalloped hat?"

By the time we entered, the receiving line had formed, and we went along with the others to speak to Patsy and Tay. Mrs. Garnett, Tay's mother, wore a soft-flowered printed chiffon, with rose hat, and looked very happy over the acquisition of a new daughter.

"Ruth Roland gets more beautiful every day," Betty said to me. "There she is, with Peggy Hamilton.

Oracle of the Mike

¶ A revealing tale of how Dolores Del Rio disclosed the fact that stars of silent drama could cope with the heartless and exacting demands of the microphone.

¶ And how Betty Compson, Conrad Nagel, Bessie Love, Norma Shearer and a surprising number of others heeded the Oracle's daring example.

By GENE O'HARA

Dolores Del Rio gambled with her career by talking and singing for her public—but she won when her phonograph record proved to be like a message from an Oracle.

DOLORES DEL RIO, Oracle of the Mike! Verily, one might bestow this title on the bewitching Mexican actress who revealed to the world—and motion picture moguls, in particular—that the microphone of the talkies would not treat unkindly the stars of the silent drama. And this same dark-eyed beauty from below the Rio Grande uncovered the fact just as efficiently as any first class and extravagantly salaried Oracle or competing fortune teller of ancient Athens ever discovered history-making information for a regular cash customer.

"How did she do it?" you ask.

First, picture the Year One of Talkie! The powers-that-be in filmland were frantically searching for golden voices—searching, not in Hollywood, but across the continent. They never stopped to think that the folks of filmtown might be able to do things other than apply make-up, don fashionable clothes and strut before cameras.

Ah, but could these same producers have seen into the future, they would have beaten a path to the door of Temple Del Rio, laying offerings before the altar of Oracle Dolores, for she could have told them that right in their own front yard, was that which they sought.

DOLORES was a generous Oracle, not like so many of her predecessors. Even though she was unrecognized and her talent unsought, she pointed out to Mr. Producer the right road. She revealed that screen stars could talk and sing, and—most important—that, when they did talk and sing—the public would listen. Yes, Dolores did all this, and she did it with her little phonograph record.

I'll always look back upon Dolores Del Rio as our first talkie star. Remember how, before we had seen the silent picture, Ramona, we were able to put the Ramona record on our Victrolas and hear in song the voice of Mexico's most important contribution to our American-made films.

Yes, the screen was talking then. Of course, there were noisy newsreels, and several operatic notables were heard exercising their tonsils, but a screen star's voice hadn't been heard until Dolores sang Ramona for records. It was considered a daring thing on the part of Dolores, but her attractive voice blazoned to the world that Hollywood, perhaps, had rich resources of its own—in a vocal way.

JUST like the ancients of Greece followed up the advice of their Oracles, so did the producers of talkies act quick on the hot tip delivered by Dolores' record.

"Thar's gold in 'em thar voices," shouted producers as they surveyed their respective rosters after Dolores proved that at least one movie star had a voice the public liked, and they proceeded to dig up the fact that most of Hollywood's leading citizens had been hiding talent that was worth millions of dollars to themselves and their companies.

A rich discovery was Leatrice Joy, who can sing and dance and speak five languages. A year and a half ago, Cecil B. De Mille told Leatrice she was through as a box office bet. She had suffered through weak stories, stories further weakened by poor direction. But while her name still was known to movie theater patrons, she decided to make the best of it, and made a personal appearance tour. Then it was found that Leatrice had a beautiful singing voice. She could dance anything from a ballroom exhibition number to the Black Bottom, and converse in five tongues. She was jerked back to Hollywood at a salary

Turkey Time

¶ Some very fair hints direct from filmland on how to get, prepare and consume that annual Thanksgiving Day dinner.

These fetching Christie comedy girls know their executions. Hearing that condemned men are fed well before hangings, they want to get the turkeys all corned up before making their necking acquaintance with the ax.

A rare bird—but well done! Thanksgiving Day may be football time for some folks, but to the captivating Barbara Kent, Universal star, it's the day to make a dash for the home plate and pitch into the turkey.

Even a vegetarian couldn't refuse to partake of this bird — if vivacious Clara Bow offered the invitation.

in Hollywood

Now Josephine has gone and Dunn it! Yep, she's all mixed up in one of those ax slayings, and appears to be fleeing from the ghost of her victim. Josephine should be freed by the jury is she lets them have a well-done leg of the corpse.

Gwen Lee and Raquel Torres make sure that their Thanksgiving turkey will fit the roasting pan, and the latter makes sure he will not escape, by putting salt on his tail. It's rather like being measured for a coffin before you die, but what bird shouldn't feel proud to die for these beauties? In fact, the gobbler looks as though he fears they might let him escape.

When captor is captured! Marion Shilling just can't decide if she likes her turkey on foot or in the roasting pan.

The SILENT

¶ Love and intrigue in talkie-crazed Hollywood, with sinister adventure riding the clouds for the love of a girl.

Begin Here.

WANDA WILEY, ravishing blonde actress, is under contract with Premier Pictures, Inc., for fifty weeks, at $3,000 a week. Her voice registers poorly over the microphone, and "Uncle" Sol Gotslieb, president of the producing company, calls in his expert in tonal vibrations, Rogers Denton, to remedy the situation.

Denton discovers attractive little Merna Martin; and, after testing her voice, decides to use her as Miss Wiley's voice double. Merna sings and dances evenings at Abe Zarto's Sow's Ear café, to earn enough to keep a brother in school, support her mother and pay the expenses of another brother in a sanitarium.

Abe Zarto is unscrupulous and is scheming to possess Merna, but she loves Barry Rowe, a romantic young aviator to whom she has not even been introduced. Wanda Wiley recognizes in Barry a prospective husband and she sets out to win him. Merna, from a desire to emulate Barry, takes up flying.

ZARTO has cunningly spread rumors that Merna is his girl, and this word reaches Barry's ears, who, by this time has begun to take notice of Merna. Rogers Denton and his fiancée, Miss Betsy Manners, a magazine story writer, befriend Merna and afford her solace against the ugly spectres of scandal and intrigue.

These unjust suspicions weigh heavily on Merna's heart and she throws herself wholly into flying, under the able tutelage of Pilot Pete Brailley.

Although Merna's conscientious "dubbing" for Miss Wiley presages great success for their picture, The Flying Blonde, Wanda slights her and treats her with contempt upon every possible pretext. Wanda, in her effort to switch Barry from any attentions to Merna, feeds him the ugly rumors about Zarto, until he, too, believes them.

One day Barry advises Merna against flying and she tries to elicit an expression of personal concern for her from him, but he assumes an indifferent attitude. Merna pluckily appears nonchalant and climbs into the cockpit of her plane, with Pete Brailley at the controls.

Now go on with the story:

THE thrill which Merna received from her first flight in an airplane was intermittently stabbed with little darts of anger and wounded pride whenever Barry's recent words occurred to her. But gradually this anger melted away to a feeling that maybe she had been rather foolish to assume that Barry Rowe should care what happened to her, of all people! And, besides, she had never been introduced to him!

At any rate, her thoughts were agreeably interrupted by Pete Brailley who, as he banked the Waco back over Rand Airport, drew her attention to a captive balloon, the basket of which contained two cameras, some cameramen and Bill Brown, the director. As Pete and Merna roared past, Brown was violently wig-wagging at them with a red ¶ Part Two of an enthralling serial of the new Hollywood.

VOICE

By HALE HORTON

Merna gave a frightened little cry as Zarto's hand flew to his hip pocket and whipped out an automatic. Barry leaped and caught Zarto's wrist as the gun exploded, crashing a solid fist into his chin with the fury of a madman.

and white signal flag. Pete cut off his motor and grinned back at Merna. "I guess Barry and Wanda need the Waco for a stunt sequence," he shouted. "Bill says we gotta do down!" Merna nodded docilely. In five minutes she was climbing from the cockpit and jumped lightly to the ground.

THAT the following weeks passed pleasantly enough for Merna was partially due to the friendly little attentions of Betsy and Denton, but more, perhaps, to her ability to shake off and forget the disagreeable situations caused by her mother's raw nerves and Zarto's persistency. She kept up her payments at the Fletcher Sanitarium—in which her younger brother was being treated—frightened her older brother into passing all his studies and finished "dubbing" in The Flying Blonde.

Then, of course, there were the flying lessons, which added their bit of agreeable excitement, and the grim humor of her instructor, Pete Brailley, who had conducted himself toward Merna with all the breezy insouciance of one who enjoys being a gentleman; a trifle rough, indeed, but this flying business was certainly no baby's game! So Merna was quite proud of herself on the afternoon of October first, when she suddenly realized that this was her last dual flight—that tomorrow she would solo.

As she gazed several thousand feet below her at the Lilliputian structure that was the Carthay Circle Theater, she was unusually philosophical: "An airplane," she was reflecting, "is just like a thought—with incredible elasticity it flies exactly where one wants it to!" And, on peeking through her pyrolyne windshield, she noticed that from the front of the large, double cockpit of the Waco, Pete Brailley was grinning approvingly and that he was motioning for her to go on up higher if she liked.

MERNA, no doubt, agreeably surprised at her little philosophical cerebration, beamed clownishly and pulled back the joy stick. Then it occurred to her that it might not be a bad idea to try a loop—Pete had certainly looped her often enough!

After giving the subject a moment of thought, she twiddled her fingers in a If-You-Don't-Mind-Kind-Sir-I-Think-I'll-Do-A-Bit-Of-A-Loop sort of a way; and Pete's jaws parted in amazement. He peered down at the ten-dollar gold piece that was the Carthay Circle. Then, with superb bravado, he flicked his hands out, palms upward, drew in the corners of his mouth and raised his eyebrows into moon-shaped arches. He seemed to be remarking: "Well, lady, if you gotta do it, get to it!"

The Carthay Circle was growing larger with annoying speed. The earth rushed up at her as the Waco's struts screamed a death cry and the motor belched its thunderous roar. Merna's heart drove the breath from her throat until she finally gathered her wits, jerked the ship out of its dive and floated away on a comfortable bank.

AFTER some additional twenty minutes of flying, Pete genially motioned her to return to the Rand Airport. Merna executed a perfect, three-point landing and taxied up to the hangar.

"You're great!" Pete exclaimed, helping her step from the plane. "You're the best pupil I ever had! And I ain't kidding, either!"

Pete's praise only enhanced Merna's wind-flushed face. "It is very good of you to say that, I do believe!" Her smile took on a self-conscious shade as she caught a glimpse of Barry Rowe striding over from his plane, The Yellow Bird. "I—I think I had better go—première of The Flying Blonde tonight—must get ready—good-bye, Mr. Brailley!" And Merna hastily darted toward her Ford coupé.

"Hey!" Pete shouted, "are you coming out for your first solo tomorrow?"

"If I possibly can," Merna promised over a shoulder. "I'll try hard!"

"What's she running for?" Barry inquired, coming up to the Waco, "finally gone cold on the flying?"

"Not a bit of it," said Pete; "she's a damn good little pilot . . . ."

Barry sounded an uncomfortable laugh.

JUST from a casual observation of that crazy loop of yours, I thought maybe you were trying to scare the kid to death—or were you just trying to demolish the theory that the ground offers resistance? You must have been all of 500 feet when you came out of it."

"Merna was piloting," Pete retorted sharply. "She was just tryin' to scare me and I'm damned if she didn't! That gal's got more nerve than a—"

"Any girl that carries on an affair with Zarto," Barry cut in, "simply must have nerve." And cooling off a bit, he added, "It sure is a shame she had to make such an ass out of herself . . . "

Pete placed a restraining hand on his friend's shoulder.

"Listen, Barry . . . You got that little gal all wrong! She works at The Sow's Ear because she needs the money to pay hospital bills for an invalid brother and to put another kid through school, not to mention supporting a neurasthenic old prune of a mother and keeping up the rent on the bungalow—She's no more havin' an affair with Zarto than I am! I hinted around, one day, and blame near got knocked down for my pains. It took a week for me to get Merna to accept my apologies and continue with her flying lessons. And on top o' that, there's somethin' phoney goin' on at the studio, cause every time I mention it, her eyes get all sad like, and I gotta change the subject . . . You must be plumb nuts to let that bum Wiley wench feed you up on all that tripe!"

Shaking himself free, Barry uttered a derisive laugh.

"Yeah! And I suppose her grandfather has rickets. Why, you poor, sentimental goof, she's just played you for a monkey, that's all!"

FOR a moment they glared at each other, then Pete smiled affectionately and lowered his fist.

"You given up flying, Barry?"

"What makes you ask?"

"You've been drunk for a week . . . You're shaking like a leaf right now . . ."

"I'm of age," was Barry's sullen answer. "What of it?"

Pete made no attempt to hide the disgust in his eyes as he remarked, "You're ruining yourself, Barry, that's all. Snap out of it and also think over what I just said about Merna . . . "

Barry stole a glance after Merna's disappearing Ford. Then he shuddered as if to cast off some disagreeable thought and turned abruptly to Pete.

"Okay, boy!" he cried—and there was a friendly light in his eye. "I'll think it over—They said at the hangar that you wanted to see me . . . ?"

"Oh, yeah . . . I didn't have much to do this morning so I ran over your Aero Sport; two tie-down flange bolts were loose . . . first thing you know one of the cylinders will fly through a strut . . . "

"I'll watch it," Barry promised lightly. "Been too busy with my stunting . . . "

"Why not let one of the mechanics give it a regular daily inspection?"

"Nobody touches The Yellow Bird but myself—"

"We don't want any accidents," Pete cautioned.

"Accidents? Accidents? What are accidents?"

MERNA hurried back to the Premier Picture Studio and without too much ceremony entered Denton's office.

He was delighted to see her, and he told her as much.

Merna was no sooner seated than she exploded with, "I did a loop!" and for the second time since his arrival in Hollywood, Denton was unable to prevent his monocle from popping out of his eye.

"You did a what?"

"A loop."

"All alone?"

"Well . . . not exactly. Pete was in the cockpit, but I was piloting the ship."

"Good for you!" Denton exclaimed, and then inquired if she were going to the opening of The Flying Blonde.

Merna nodded rather apathetically. "With Abe."

A faint scowl flickered across Denton's forehead as he remarked: "I doubt if you'll have to dance at the Sow's Ear much longer. Our new picture starts next week and it is likely that you will have a nice part."

"Really!" cried Merna; and her radiant face was that of a young lady experiencing the ultimate in joy.

"Well . . " Denton ventured, allowing his smile of pleasure to contradict his cautious tone, "it's faintly possible—I've been talking with Sol about you, but of course he started in on Wanda. A woman," he added sadly, "with a voice like that, is nothing but a walking futility! However, I have a hunch that something will break."

Merna tried valiantly to keep her spirits as bright and joyous as this news surely warranted, but the task was difficult, for during the past two months she had undergone so many disappointments and disagreeable experiences that her soul would bound lightly at the slightest hint of success and almost immediately settle back to a dull sense of hopelessness.

THAT is really quite wonderful," she finally admitted, "but somehow I feel afraid . . . I'm not exactly sure of what . . ."

"That's no way to feel," Denton cut in, sternly. "Being afraid will never get you anywhere! Where will you be tomorrow morning?"

"At The Sow's Ear, rehearsing for the new show, you know . . . and after that, I'll be home."

"I may call you."

"I am sorry, but I must go now and see about my gown for the opening. Good-bye."

"By Jove!" Denton exclaimed, about five minutes later, as Betsy stepped into the room. "You look simply stunning today!"

Betsy did her best to summon a stony glare; it was, however, far from perfect. "Just today?"

Ukelele Ike Goes Hollywood

The master ukulele strummer proves that he is a wise-cracker of the first class in this amusing treatise on why he prefers Hollywood to Broadway.

By
CLIFF (UKELELE IKE) EDWARDS

HOLLYWOOD is the only place I know where they give away new cars with every five gallons of gasoline you buy. Just as I said to Jack Gilbert one afternoon—of course he didn't answer me back—this moving picture town is a great place for us guys from the big city. It is the only spot I ever saw where people eat breakfast earlier than 5 p. m.

Believe me, you can have all your Broadway. I'll take my Hollywood boulevard straight with a good night's sleep on the side anytime to working until you have to join the milkman's union or have the band walk out on you. I never knew that sunrise had anything to do with getting up before. Out here I see actors actually sunburned. They'd be run off Broadway as hopeless rounders for that. Staying up all day and not fit to do a night's work.

I LIKE to work in pictures. It's much better than doing five shows a day. Here you only have to sing one song fifteen times a day for fifteen days to finish a scene that is cut out later on. I began in this big Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer revue. They were so long making it the director forgot what the title was when it was finished. I suggested they christen it Let's Do It Again.

Ukelele Ike, one of the chief funmakers in M-G-M's "Hollywood Revue of 1929," croons a novelty number.

Here's a real surprise. I'm going to be leading man to Greta Garbo!

I think it will be about next January or February from what Greta told me. She sure was swell about it, too. I just walked up to her, slapped her on the back and said, "Baby, how would you like to have a sheik like me for a screen lover, eh?"

SHE looked me over and made up her mind in a flash. "It'll be a long, cold day when you get in a picture with me!" she said; so, as I told you, it looks like something that's coming up next winter.

Oh, but this Garbo is a warm mamma!

I saw her the other night at the skating rink. The ice arena turned into a Turkish bath after she skated across once. They tell that she walked through the big Stockholm blizzard when she was back home last winter and the snow melted and spring flowers plopped right up after her.

It sure is funny to walk along the streets out here now that everybody is going talkie mad. You don't know whether to call the cops when you meet some egg

Rushing into

Harry Carr

Harry Carr, a veteran motion picture critic and well-known Los Angeles Times columnist, whose comments anent the motion picture industry appear exclusively in SCREEN SECRETS among fan magazines, is without peer as a screen observer. Among his other accomplishments, he has received official credit for the motion picture masterpieces, Old Ironsides and The Wedding March.

HOLLYWOOD seems to have been making a concerted rush for the altar this month.

Patsy Ruth Miller, Ruth Elder, Mary Eaton . . . With Clara Bow in the offing . . .

And the beautiful Dolores Costello holding out as a threat or promise to the brides what Mr. Kipling calls "the almost inevitable consequences" . . . her expectation of an heir to the house of John Barrymore.

Defied the Jinx

IT BEING Hollywood, none of the brides kept the date with the preacher, exactly.

Patsy Ruth shrugged her shoulders at the old superstition; and had her wedding two or three weeks ahead of the date of the invitations; her kid brother had to go back to college.

Late? Sure!

MARY EATON breezed in half an hour late to her's, reducing the church organist to the edge of nervous prostration. He played The Wedding March until he wore out the pipes; then, in desperation, he wheezed off into Wagner's Evening Star; The Broadway Melody, and You Were Meant For Me. A young lady assistant was scrambling around on the floor trying in a frenzy to find more music and the organist was getting ready to play It Makes Me Laugh to Think I Cried for You, when the bride finally appeared. She was well worth waiting for.

Both Patsy and Miss Eaton married directors—Tay Garnett and Millard Webb. Tay is the most promising young fellow to take up the megaphone for many years.

Millard Webb and his new bride, Mary Eaton, showed Georges Carpentier around the lot when he visited the Paramount studios at Astoria, Long Island, recently.

Hot Art

WHICH brings us to Tay's talkie with James Gleason and Robert Armstrong—Oh, Yeah; it is a good deal like Is Zat So?—only with freight brakemen instead of prize fighters.

I mention it to show how the really big leaguers go to infinite pains to get things right. Any ordinary scenario writer would have made up the freight brakemen out of his imagination. Gleason got a permit from the Southern Pacific railroad and lived with the freight crews at Indio in the heat of the summer.

It is so hot in this desert town that it is of record that an Indio man once died and had to send back from hell for his overcoat. Any author who is willing to sizzle in a heat of 120 to collect local color must love his art something terrible.

When Clara Loves

WHEN the little god of love hit Clara Bow, it must have been with a two-ton T. N. T. explosive shell instead of the accustomed arrow.

Clara is a lady of high experience. She has had more beaus than all the rest of the girls in Hollywood put together. But she went clear under when Harry Richman, the singer and night club magnate, slipped an engagement ring, the size of a locomotive headlight, upon her third finger.

Which Wins?

I HAVE often wondered which one talks the other off the map when Joan Crawford and Clara meet up. Clara talks about her intended without pause and no one, to date, has ever heard Joan mention any subject other than her new husband—Doug Fairbanks, Jr. However, I am very proud of Doug myself; so it's all right with me.

Tin Pan Alley

A COUPLE of the starving song writers you read about will probably manage to stagger through the winter without getting into the bread lines.

Nacio Herb Brown and Arthur Freed have tinkled out a few theme songs, at the M-G-M studio, which have earned them in royalties—not to mention fat salaries—over $500,000.

Broadway Melody, You Were Meant For Me, The Wedding of the Painted Dolls, Singin' in the Rain, and Ramon Novarro's Pagan Love Song, are a bouquet of knock-outs to their credit.

Freed writes the lyrics and Brown the music. The latter used to be a chubby choir boy in Los Angeles and still runs a merchant tailoring business on the side.

Fred Niblo, veteran M-G-M director, enjoys an afternoon in the garden with his three children, Loris, Peter, and Judith Beryl.

Small wonder that "Gold Diggers of Broadway" ranks as one of Warner Brothers' best 1929 attractions. Here are Ann Pennington and Gertrude Short, whose dazzling charms make work a joy for the cameraman.

High Brow Stuff

A NEW bond of interest has arisen between Ramon Novarro and me. His younger brother—Jose Samiengos, whom he is sending through college—is a university buddy of the Crown Prince of our family. To hear their childish prattle about differential calculus and the chemical properties of something whose name I can't remember, is just too sweet. They always speak in Spanish; but it might as well be Greek.

I Am Panned

I HAVE received many fan letters, panning me to a crisp for my remarks in the September issue about Ramon Novarro in The Pagan.

Neither these indignant letters, the fact that The Pagan has been the most successful play of his career, or the other fact that I am personally very fond of Ramon, changes my opinion. He may have been interesting; but he was not sincere in his portrayal of the character of a Polynesian boy.

Just so, Richard Dix, in one of the most successful plays he ever made, was about as much like a Navajo Indian as he was like John D. Rockefeller. I have known many California Indians, but never one who ever remotely resembled Allesandro, as portrayed by Warner Baxter in

"I Want a Lover"

¶ Mary Nolan, ravishing blonde beauty, relates a surprising story of why her leading man must be a lover, if she is to win success.

By LAURA BENHAM

"I WANT a lover!" announced Mary Nolan.

Could I believe my ears? Could this startling statement be coming from the girl who is reputed to have left a trail of broken hearts across Europe, the Atlantic ocean and America, clear to California?

For a moment she said nothing more. Then, noticing my incredulous expression, she hastened to reassure me, "Oh, I don't mean in my private life—such lovers are easy for any woman to acquire. But I mean in my career. That is how I need, and must have a lover."

"My leading man must be a lover. He must know all the subtle shadings and feelings of a lover, in order to inspire in me the proper reactions. But that is not an original statement. Many actresses will tell you that. No matter how little a man may mean to you away from the studio, when you are playing a tense, emotional scene together, it is vitally necessary that he be able to call forth from you an almost subconscious response.

"But I want more than that. I want a lover for my director, too. He, too, must be able to reach me. He must be able to grasp and feel every nuance of emotion, of both man and woman, in order to evoke from me the interpretation I am attempting."

MARY was very intense. She spoke as if the subject were one to which she had devoted much thought, and had arrived at her decision advisedly. We were sitting in a little restaurant between scenes of The Shanghai Lady.

"This has been a hard picture," she continued. "Jimmy Murray plays opposite me. He is a nice kid, but he hasn't been married very long. His wife has stayed on the set almost constantly, and how can he make love to me convincingly, when his mind is across the stage on his bride? In some of our most intense love scenes, I have realized that Jimmy was reciting his lines well, perfectly in fact—but without feeling them. I don't think wives of either actors or directors should ever be allowed on the set when their husbands are working—it just doesn't work out."

ARE you happy?" I asked Mary, as we sat awaiting the arrival of our luncheon.

She had a faraway look in her eyes as she countered, "Why, what a funny question—is anybody happy? No, I'm not happy, in the accepted sense of the word. And I never expect to be. I don't believe there is such a thing as happiness, if by happiness, you mean a rapturous, glamourous joy that transcends one's very being. But contentment, yes. That is achieved many times. I am content—to a certain extent, anyway—and I should approximate happiness if I could ever do a marvelous picture that would really satisfy me.

"But I am always dissatisfied with my work when I finish a part. No matter how kind the critics may be to me, I can always find glaring faults in my portrayals, and am never satisfied.

"When I first started out to make my way in the world, I used to dream of some day accomplishing something really worth while—of giving a bit, no matter how small, toward something constructive in my art. I hoped that some day I should work with people wise in the ways of the world, who had lived and who had loved, so that they could help me to express myself on the screen.

"For that is what counts. Pictures mean everything in life to me. I love being an actress but I hate the talkies. They limit one. You know the deepest emotions are the ones which we can never talk about, the ones that are best expressed by a touch of the hands, by a glance of the eye. So, to me, talking pictures can never be other than a perfected form of talking machine record, in which everyone has had ample time to rehearse and learn given lines

Poor Mary Nolan, who says John Gilbert was wonderful to work with, now languishes for a leading man who knows all the subtle feelings of a lover, so that she may be inspired to greater histrionic reactions. Who wouldn't want the job?

Weeping Wheeler Laughs

¶ Bert Wheeler's boyhood dreams never did manage to come true, yet his career has been full of fun.

¶ The ga-ga comedy man who eats, cries and sings at the same time.

REMEMBER Bert Wheeler in Ziegfeld's Follies? Bert is the comedian who came out and sat down in the footlight trough and cried, ate a ham sandwich and sang a love ditty all at the same time. He's the big ta-da and ga-ga comedy merchant who some time ago arrived in Hollywood to let loose his choice chatter into the mike at the RKO studio.

He's an earnest little fellow, this revue clown who has brought more cheer to Broadway than the skyrocketing of any stock—a sort of a dreamer. He says that for years before his name went in electric lights along the Alley of Applesauce, he went to his dressing room every night with the same eager sort of fearful hope, that a letter from Ziegfeld, offering him a job, would be awaiting him. That intense eagerness, that never failing hope, that watchful eye for the long-awaited letter became a part of his life.

"And when I finally signed with Ziegfeld and went to work every night, knowing that there wasn't that letter to look forward to, something seemed missing in life. I think I grew up when I finally stopped hoping for that letter."

BERT had another dream, one he had had for years after he graduated from prop boy to stock company actor in Paterson, New Jersey, his home town. He wanted to be another Carter De Haven. To wear fine clothes and breeze through a dashing juvenile's rôle, was the fond hope of his life.

He was awakened from this dream at Syracuse, New York, where he succeeded Harry Gribbon as the company's comedian. The night before, he had sat, by mistake, on the top hat of a German character actor. The German was furious and wanted to make Bert unhappy.

The next night, just before Bert went on the stage, he was admiring the fit of his coat in a full-length mirror, turning this way and that, admiring himself.

"So you think you're a dashing juvenile, eh?" snickered the German. "Look at those legs, those shoulders, that chest, and that face. A juvenile, it is to laugh!"

And, like Merton, Bert awoke to the tragic realization that he had a "low comedy face". But that pan and his funmaking have since brought him fame and fortune.

Bert Wheeler always wanted to be a dashing juvenile, but Fate decreed he should be one of the most popular funsters of the day.

The German character actor's brunt appraisal of Bert's stage presence as the handsome lover of the footlights, completely shattered his tower of dreams. So he set grimly to work to build a new structure out of the ruins of his pet ambition, and put all his efforts into comedy work in an endeavor to blot out the greatest disappointment of his life.

He persistently studied the art of corralling laughs, although it was exceedingly disheartening at times to continue clowning when he secretly believed he could inspire heart throbs as the dashing matinee idol. But it is characteristic of Bert Wheeler, that if he can't get what he wants, he proceeds to hitch his wagon to another star. And that is why he managed to choke back a tear or two, to bury his past hopes deep in a secret corner of his heart, and then to climb step by step to the heights of success as a funster.

Bert has had his taste of vaudeville, too. Vaudeville fans everywhere knew and loved Bert and Betty Wheeler. Vaudeville fans also later knew the story of how Bert gave Betty all their life's savings to make her happy when she ran away with another man. It is one of those Pagliacci stories of the stage. They tell it at the National Vaudeville Association club with a tear or two.

BUT is has no place here, for Bert is married again and more proud of his six-months'-old baby than his twenty-four sheet billings.

He's the sort of a man who likes vivid colors. He never wears jewelry. He's mad about six-day bicycle races and used to arrange his vaudeville bookings so that he could take a vacation when the Madison Square races were on. He'll reach for a smoke instead of a sweet, and he likes to drive a car, in fact, he has driven across the continent three times.

Bert hates to look at pictures of himself, but he likes to tie his tie in the mirror . . . and take ten minutes to do it. He plays the rôle he created for Ziegfeld in the all-talking, all-musical extravaganza RKO has made of Rio Rita.

You'll like Bert Wheeler when you see him and you'll laugh at him, too—the little boy who wanted to be a Carter De Haven.

Grace Kingsley

HOBNOBBING

¶ A famous columnist and feature writer chronicles intimate gossip of the film capital for SCREEN SECRETS readers. Miss Kingsley's long experience in Pacific Coast newspaperdom has won her unquestioned authority as a critic and observer of motion picture happenings.

By GRACE KINGSLEY

IS NILS ASTHER, after all his years of being a free spirit, a film idol, really to wed at last?

He and Vivian Duncan say so.

Vivian is half of the famous Duncan duo, stars of Topsy and Eva, the musical comedy. Rosetta Duncan is the other half.

Nils and Vivian were engaged once before, when the sisters were starring in the picture version of Topsy and Eva. That was when Nils really was discovered. The Duncans were looking at screen tests, with a view to selecting somebody to play the lead in the picture. When the test of Nils was thrown on the screen, they instantly decided he was their man.

Soon everybody noticed that Vivian seemed to be taking more than a professional interest in the handsome young actor, and soon little Eva was known to have fallen in love. Then the engagement was announced.

But Vivian and Rosetta went north to play a vaudeville engagement, leaving Nils to roam Hollywood alone. He roamed in Vivian's car, and what's more—not alone. Vivian heard about it when she came back to Hollywood, and sent Nils back his ring. He sent roses to her apartment and rang her up day and night, but she wouldn't even speak to him. Then the sisters went to Europe for a year.

Now they are back in Hollywood, making pictures at the same studio where Nils Asther is working; and just as we prophesied a month or two ago, the two lovers have patched up their row.

The other day when I was at the studio, Vivian was declaring that she wanted to take a peek at Greta Garbo, Clara Bow kicks a pair of twinkling tootsies as she lounges in her hammock for a bit of relaxation between scenes on the Paramount lot while the cameraman willingly works overtime.

"Bye-bye, Ben", says Bebe Daniels, as she prepares to climb into the cockpit of her plane, for a solo flight. Ben Lyon is an accomplished pilot and it is he who is responsible for Bebe's proficiency in managing her spirited air steed.

with the FILM FOLK

Mrs. Leanna C. Donner App, ninety-five years old, broke a rule of long standing, when she posed for her picture. Mary Brian's natural charm has disarmed her new acquaintance.

who was working in the next set. But as Nils was Greta's leading man, we decided it was Nils at whom Vivian wanted to peek. She tiptoed over and peeped through a hole in the canvas walls. No Nils was visible, and she speedily lost interest.

But we heard that Nils had been peeping at Vivian while Vivian worked.

How Cupid Works

THE way the couple happened to make up is as romantic as possible.

Belle Bennett is rather an incorrigible match-maker, but so sweet and wise about it that everybody loves her for it. Belle saw how things were with Nils and Vivian—neither one willing to give in and make first advances—so she invited both to sail with her and her husband, Fred Windermere, on her yacht, The Dove—which sure was working hard at its gentle job of peace-making during the next few days.

Vivian and Nils met, tried to say hello nonchalantly, spoke a few words. And then something quite characteristic of Vivian happened. She started to go in swimming, slipped and fell into the water and Nils gallantly rescued her. That is, he went in after her, although it isn't likely she would have drowned anyway.

When The Dove came back from her voyage to Catalina, the engagement was announced.

This will not be Nils' first marriage. He was wed when very young to a Swedish girl, from whom, however, he has been divorced for some time.

Bebe and Ben Fly

BEBE DANIELS always was noted for her courage. When nobody else would ride a certain horse or dive from a certain angle into deep water, Bebe would always do it.

And now she has become a flyer. She has several hours in the air to her credit.

Ben Lyon, her fiancé, was her teacher, of course. They fly together a great deal. Living across the street from each other in Hollywood, many a morning, early, when neither is working, Ben dashes over to Bebe's apartment, and away the two go in his car to the flying field, whence they take off for an early morning spin.

Little George Billings, winner of the Our Gang contest in Canada, shakes hands with Wheezer, the justly famous star of Hal Roach comedies.

Mary Brian With Pioneer

MARY BRIAN made a fascinating acquaintance lately. She was playing in a picture which was photographing scenes up in Sonora and Columbia, California, where still dwell many pioneers.

"I met Mrs. App," Mary told me. "Mrs. App, you know, was the sole survivor of the ill-fated Donner party. She is very old, and refuses to have her picture taken. But as good luck would have it, I won her over, and she was photographed with me. Here's the secret. I was wearing the old-fashioned wide hoop-skirted dress which I wore in the picture, when I met her, and she was so delighted that she gave in when I wanted her to have her photograph taken with me."

THE SCREEN

By EDWARD R. SAMMIS,

GOLD DIGGERS OF BROADWAY

WINNIE LIGHTNER used to be in vaudeville—then she played on Broadway—now she's in the talkies. Here's hoping she stays. She just puts Gold Diggers of Broadway in her pocket and walks away with it in her usual manner that is both vivacious and carefree.

There isn't much of the original stage play left in the picture, as presented by Warners. But around the title they have built a musical extravaganza which is well able to stand on its own merits.

The usual story of several chorus dames and their tactics for gaining a livelihood is made hilariously funny by Miss Lightner and her supporting cast. Nick Lucas and his banjo do their share, while Ann Pennington's twinkling toes have never been seen to better advantage. Nancy Welford handles her rôle competently, and our own Lilyan Tashman could not be improved upon, as the high-hat chorus lady.

Helen Foster and William Bakewell carry a slim love interest, but the picture's main claim to fame lies in its pictorial effects, its lively music, as written by Joe Burke and Al Dubin, two Broadway importations, and the charming technicolor effects.

Larry Ceballos, the Warner dance director, puts over another chorus that leaves nothing to be desired in the way of breath-taking feminine beauty and well-nigh perfect dance rhythm.—Warner Brothers.

FAST LIFE

SEVERAL of the younger generation of screen actors distinguish themselves in a fantastic conception of what the younger generation is supposed to be like in life, in this fast moving stark drama which is all that the name implies.

The story, as seems to be the way with stories in the talkies nowadays, doesn't amount to much. In a group of hard-drinking, hard-living young people, there are three boys in love with the same girl, Loretta Young. After an apparently compromising situation between Loretta and Doug Fairbanks, Jr., obviously injected to give the audience a thrill, there is a free-for-all fight between the three boys and one of them is killed. Doug is accused, but Chester Morris saves the situation by confessing that he is the murderer, and committing suicide.

The picture is saved, however, by the acting of the cast. All comparatively newcomers in pictures, they all conduct themselves like veterans. Loretta Young shows poise and dignity beyond her years. Doug Fairbanks, Jr., is effective, but Chester Morris carries off the acting honors, although, as usual, he comes to a tragic end. It would be fun once to see a picture in which Chester is still alive and kicking at the end.

It is strong fare but good entertainment.—First National-Vitaphone.

IN REVIEW

SCREEN SECRETS REVIEWER

RIO RITA

RADIO Pictures makes its first pretentious bow to the public in bringing to the screen the musical hit of several seasons ago, Rio Rita. With Bebe Daniels and John Boles, both possessing beautiful voices, in the leading rôles, and with an able supporting chorus, Rio Rita, beautifully recorded and beautifully staged, is brought to the screen in all its original glory.

The story is as flimsy as any musical comedy story. The Kinkajou is a wily Mexican bandit who defies capture. While seeking him, Captain Stewart of the Texas Rangers comes to the rancho of Rita, a beautiful Mexican señorita, and falls in love with her. However, he finds a rival in an important Mexican rebel general, who also yearns for the heart and hand of the heroine. Back and forth across the Rio Grande they play tag with each other, until the action finally comes to a dramatic finish on a gorgeous houseboat in the middle of the river.

Both Boles and Bebe have beautiful voices. It is the crowning triumph of her career for Bebe, a sensational comeback after years spent in comedy rôles. There are large and effective chorus numbers beautifully staged, and the last scenes of the picture in full color are outstanding. Not the least important work in the picture is done by Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey as the comedians, with the help of Dorothy Lee in an ingenue rôle.—RKO.

MARRIED IN HOLLYWOOD

IN THIS, the first original operetta to be written especially for the screen, there is a certain charm that you will not soon forget.

Like the flowers that bloom in the spring, the title has nothing to do with the case. Or practically nothing. There is a short sequence at the end, in which the lovers find each other amid the melée of movie making. But most of the action takes place in one of those vague European kingdoms, and is of the same fluffy stuff as those delightful light operas of a score or so of years ago; which, unfortunately, are seldom seen nowadays.

The story concerns the adventures of an American singer who is wooed, and almost won, by Prince Nicky, the playboy heir to the throne. However, various things intervene, including the Queen, the Prince's mother, a revolution or two, and several gross of misunderstandings. None of these things, however, can compare to the Queen, the Prince's mother, who makes effective use of the divine right of the king's wives to break up the romances between royalty and the common peepul. However, true love finally triumphs, after any number of songs about it. There is a light, comic-opera tone to the whole think that makes it highly entertaining.

Norma Terris, who plays the American singer, and John Murray, who is Prince Nicky, both have beautiful voices. And honors go to Marcel Silver, the director.—Fox.

THE SATURDAY NIGHT KID

CLARA BOW has returned to the shop-girl rôles of her early pictures in this, her latest rollicking comedy. Clara is one of those girls who is just too big-hearted for words. She lets her little sister, Jean Arthur, get away with everything she prizes, including her sweetie. Things finally come to a pretty pass when little sister makes away with some important funds.

James Hall is satisfactory as the sweetie, although the part doesn't give him much opportunity to accomplish an outstanding performance.

The best thing about the picture is the snappy dialogue written by John V. A. Weaver.—Paramount.

THE THIRTEENTH CHAIR

THIS old-time stage thriller preserves all of its power to produce gooseflesh in the screen version, as made under the direction of Lionel Barrymore.

The weird and spooky atmosphere is well kept throughout; due, in a large degree, to the extraordinary voice of Margaret Wycherly, who plays the rôle of the seeress for many years on the stage.

The story concerns the attempt to discover a murderer through a seance. During the seance another murder is committed. The solution, however, is carefully obscured. Leila Hyams stands out in the supporting cast, and Bela Lugosi, is a convincing detective.—M-G-M.

UNTAMED

JOAN CRAWFORD does a striking bit of character work as an untamed daughter of the jungle, raised among the savages of the South Seas, in this new picture. Dark makeup is becoming to her, although it fades out during the course of the picture, for no good reason.

The story concerns the difficulties which the jungle girl experiences in adapting herself to the refinements of modern society. These are further complicated when she falls in love with Robert Montgomery on board ship returning to New York. Joan gets along all right for a little while at a time, but the moment always comes when she just can't help socking somebody. Montgomery establishes himself on the screen as a promising juvenile.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

THE VIRGINIAN

GARY COOPER breaks out in the talkies with a marvelous voice in this picture version of Owen Wister's successful novel of the old west in the days when men were men and died with their boots on more often than not.

It is the most successful outdoor talkie since In Old Arizona, and manages to keep up the illusion of rapid motion in spite of the microphones hung all over the place. Gary Cooper is a Southerner with western ideas, whose sweetheart does not understand why he has to go about shooting people to keep his code from being infringed upon. Mary Brian is sweet as the schoolmarm and Dick Arlen and Walter Huston give effective characterizations as frontiersmen.—Paramount.

HARD TO GET

DOROTHY MACKAILL rarely misses when it comes to providing delightful comedy, no matter how trite the picture. However, Charles Delaney cannot equal Jack Mulhall as a foil for her foolery.

The story has nothing new about it. Dorothy is a working girl. She is tempted by Edmund Burns, his millions and his motor cars. But she spurns them all for the affections of a poor but honest auto mechanic.

The best bits are the comedy parts such as when Dorothy, to impress Burns, pretends that a swanky Fifth Avenue mansion is her own. Jack Oakie contributes his usual good comedy.—First National.

THE MISSISSIPPI GAMBLER

PICTURESQUE productions about early days on the Mississippi seem to be all the rage just now. In the familiar character of the Mississippi gambler, Joseph Schildkraut finds a rôle well suited to his colorful personality. There is a great similarity to Show Boat in the scenes and locale. It seems that Alec Francis, a wealthy southern planter, has lost to Joseph Schildkraut, the gambler, money which he did not rightfully possess. He is about to kill himself when his daughter, Joan Bennett, stops him, declaring she will get the money back. She sits down to play poker with Schildkraut, staking herself against the money. Then things move rapidly.—Universal.

MELODY LANE

WHERE have we heard this before—the one about a black-face comedian whose wife didn't understand him, but who loved his little kiddie, although not quite enough to keep from singing him songs? It's a good plot. It always has been a good plot. And, unless we movie fans get a break—and there isn't any hope in sight, as yet—it probably always will be a good plot.

It's tough on a good trouper like Eddie Leonard to start him off in the talkies without giving him a chance to get in a little novelty stuff.

Eddie has a good voice, he puts over his songs well, and has something appealing about him. But who's with me to start a send-the-movie-kiddies-back-to-school movement? —Universal.

DYNAMITE

IN WHICH C. B. de Mille, celluloid salvation shouter, points another moral and adorns another tale with more of the latter than the former.

The tale is all about love, marriage and divorce in high society country clubs, millionaires' mansions, coal mines and where are we? It is, of course, lavishly sprinkled with passions, nice and not so nice, and, it being a de Mille picture, there is a bath tub—and a glass one at that.

Kay Johnson, the girl in the picture, is in love with another woman's husband, Conrad Nagel, which provides the necessary complications. Charles Bickford, from the stage, is excellent in the rôle of the miner. De Mille in his first talkie, presents lavish entertainment.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

CAUGHT

¶ Did these stars plunge into matrimony when the bait of new love caught them on the rebound from amorous disaster? Decide after reading this story of movie marriages.

By FRANCES COLLIER

It is said that Gary Cooper, who is rumored as being engaged to Lupe Velez, was not any too happy about Evelyn Brent's marriage to Harry Edwards, when Senorita Cyclone dashed triumphantly into his heart.

MOTHER knows best!

Now, Edna Ferber, please lay off until I explain. Elsie Janis, I wasn't talking about you at all. Can't you let a gal do a little high class philosophizing?

The first time I came a cropper in the matter of amours occurred just after my tenth birthday, I conceived a terrific yen for a boy whose family had moved next door to us. But alas, the charms of my blonde self attracted him not at all, while he fell an instant victim to the fascinations of a red-headed wench down the street. Not having as yet learned the fine feminine art of concealing emotions, I tried to retaliate by pegging stones at the pair one afternoon. My scandalized mother forced a confession, which ended in tears.

"Never mind, darling," she consoled, drawing me on her knee. "Let mother give you a bit of advice no girl can hear too soon. They will probably have a fight over marbles or ice cream cones next week, and that will be the time for you to step in. Listen to mother, and never forget what she is saying. The best time to catch any man is on the rebound."

Was mother right? I might exclaim, and how! If any skeptics linger in the vicinity, let me beg them to take a glance at our recent movie marriages.

NOW I am quite certain that Ina Claire and Jack Gilbert are in love with each other. Not only have I read Jack's printed superlatives to the effect that "Ina is the nicest girl he ever met," and that he is "the proudest man in the world," as well as Ina's fervent declaration that her wedding day was "the happiest occasion of her life," but I have just been talking to the best friend of a cousin of a girl who worked in The Awful Truth, the undeniably beautiful and talented Broadway star's first talking picture. This young lady declares that everyone connected with Ina's picture, from Marshall Neilan, the director, to the electricians and prop boys were thoroughly sold on Ina Claire, stage and screen actress, married John Gilbert after a whirlwind romance that began when the latter's long and ardent courtship of Greta Garbo hit the rocks.

ON THE REBOUND

Did someone put a dent in Joan Crawford's heart just before she married Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.?

Jascha Heifetz, world famed violinist, and Florence Vidor were married soon after Hollywood was informed of the end of her romance with George Fitzmaurice, who startled the unsuspecting film colony by his unlooked for marriage to Diana Kane.

the genuine quality of this romance. The two may have known each other only three weeks—but, after all, look at the good use Elinor Glyn managed to make of the same period of time.

At all events, the days that followed their marriage found John dutifully cooling his heels outside the colonial mansion where Pathé pictures are produced, whenever he completed work at the neighboring Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer beehive of cinematic industry, before his bride ended her day's toil. There is no doubt that something very fine exists between the famous stage comédienne and the noted screen lover—

But—

Just a few weeks prior to the evening when John Gilbert found himself talking to a pretty and fascinating fellow guest at a party, whom he declares he fell in love with then and there before discovering her identity, one Greta Garbo arrived in New York from a four months' absence in her native Sweden. The state of affection existing between the glamorous Nordic and the handsome Gilbert had been the object of public speculation for two years. It is a well known fact that the two had, on one occasion, started out to be married, only to have Greta change her mind before the fatal words were spoken.

After a time the Garbo-Gilbert romance seemed to flower again. Whenever Greta made her infrequent social or public appearances John was always her cavalier.

While Greta holidayed in her native land, there was much talk of a romance with a member of the Swedish Royal family. Evidently, competition did not discourage

Reeling Down

Chatter about Chatterton—Lily knocks 'em cockeyed—Clive Brook, gentleman—Re-Joyce with Dolores—Across the foam with Neil Hamilton—Evelyn Brent's honeymoon—A new Duse?—and other flashes from Broadway's Great White Way.

By TED SHANE,
SCREEN SECRETS New York Correspondent

RUTH CHATTERTON steamed into town for a much-needed vacation last week, pals, and did she get it? Not on your daguerreotype. No sooner had she arrived than the Paramount slave drivers descended on her like a ton of brick, kidnapped her to the Astoria studios and put her to work on Sarah and Son, a piece Zoe Akins had scribbled for the late Jeanne Eagels. Miss Eagels, always temperamental, was suffering from nervousness and was unable to continue work on the production she had just started. Her death, said to have been the direct result of an overdose of drug taken to induce sleep, followed several days later. Hence Ruth's being rushed to the rescue.

When Ruth finishes Sarah, she will snap into the Laughing Lady, with Clive Brook. And then, if Paramount finds nothing else lying around for her to clean up, she may get her vacation, that is, if Paramount in Hollywood doesn't scream for her services back on the Coast. Poor, poor Ruth. She had just made up with her husband, Ralph Forbes, too, after a long and somewhat bitter separation. Also, Ruth left her mother, Mrs. Tillie Chatterton, back in Hollywood to keep Ralph happy 'til she returned. Ruth was one of the five leading actresses in the American theater before she went mike. I would rank her with Ethel Barrymore, Katherine Cornell, Helen Hayes and Jeanne Eagels. Her success in the talkies has been phenomenal. She has increased more rapidly in popularity than any other screen star known. Her fan mail now equals Garbo's. Madame X and Jealousy, both her pictures, have gone like La Vie Parisienne at a boy's prep school. Well, more power to her. Especially since she saved her marriage with Ralph Forbes from being just another wrecktangle.

You'll Be Pleased Damita, Folks!

WELL, Leetel Keedeez, ze Bremen was not wizzout her large cargo of sex appeal on her record breaking maiden voyage to America. For, very much in evidence aboard her was that irrepressible cutie of French cuties, toast of seven continents and feefty meellion Frenchmen (who can't be wrong): Lily Damita. Lily had all the women aboard stopped and the men at her collective feet. She has two, of course, just like you and me, Elmer. But Lily gave all prospective suitors the mitten before they got started. Lily is having none. Not that she likes her pipe and dog better than men, but eet seems she's met nobody to grow crazy about yet and she weell wait onteel Meestaire Right comes along. So Lily is just going to struggle along a bachelor girl for a time.

It seems to me that a girl, like Lily, without a sweetheart is very strange.

Anyway, Lily had been to France to see her mammy, buy clothes, rest from her arduous screen duties (I still can't understand how anyone can call acting for the movies "work") and break large, juicy, male French hearts. Lily, I ought to hasten to explain, is as native to France as are frog's legs, high-waisted pants and snails. She was discovered and brought to the U. S. A., you remember, by Samuel Goldwyn, that quiet old retired country gentleman who runs United Artists.

Lily's made a tremendous sensation with her work in The Cockeyed World, which has been playing at the Roxy as long as the oldest inhabitant can remember, and which is setting various records about the country.

Doris, Mary and Pearl Eaton, long favorites in Broadway successes, are now marching on toward greater glory, in Cinemaland. Doris and Pearl are with RKO, while Mary has chosen to cast her lot with Paramount. It looks as though this lovable trio will be just as popular on the screen as they were back of the footlights.

Broadway

He'll Brook No Nonsense

BELIEVE it or not, Clive Brook's been here for months and I knew nothing about it 'til only the other day. Clive, it seems, is one of the quietest men in the movies today. As someone remarked, "He is an example of that rare paradox: An actor who plays gentleman on the screen and is a gentleman off." And it's certainly evident from Clive's actions in New York. He is not a night club hound and doesn't believe in the manufacture of whoopee. He bases his ideas in the matter on that old conservative principle that the night is made for sleeping, not booze-steeping.

Clive's been hard at work at the Paramount studios in Astoria, living at the Warwick, Marion Davies' establishment. He's just finished The Return of Sherlock Holmes and will embark immediately upon the Laughing Lady, with Ruth Chatterton. He expects to return to that city of Klieg and Mike, Hollywood, on its completion. Clive, you know, is an Englishman. He's had vast stage experience and his voice is one of the pleasantest, most charming and cultured that I know. He speaks real English on the screen and not Rocky Mountain-Pennsylvania Dutch-Texan drawl-East Side pidgin Eengaleesh.

His wife and two children are awaiting him eagerly in Hollywood. He is, I regret to say, oh scandal-snoopers, happily married. You cannot hold a scandal to him. Should I hear of him rolling hoops in Central Park early mornings with whoopee Loopee Velez, I'll telegraph you, oh, snoopers. But, at the present moment, there doesn't seem to be a chance. I'm sorry. You can't get babble from a babbling brook, if the Brook doesn't babble.

The Joyce of Dolores' Life

DOLORES (which means "pains" in Spanish) Del Rio would be the only one in the movies who would do it. It went like this. She was due to arrive in New York on a recent afternoon and be rushed to a Brooklyn theater to make a personal appearance at the opening of Evangeline. The transcontinental train, supposedly bearing her, arrived at the Pennsylvania Station, the reporters got out their notebooks and licked their pencils, the cameramen took an extra look into their cameras to make sure there was film in the magazine, the snapshotters put an extra load of dynamite on their flares, the sob sisters got out an extra hankerchief to weep into, the publicity boys got their best beams ready on their faces, and all the professional male fans and train-meeters rubbed their shoes on the backs of their trousers legs to put a little better polish on them (the shoes, not the trousers).

But, alas, alack and a flock of zowies! there was no Del Rio. Nothing even as Mexican as a bottle of Tabasco or a bull got off the train. The United Artist publicity boys ran frantically up and down the platform asking Alice Terry is here from Europe, pretty well washed up with Rex Ingram. She is seen in public often in the company of a young Russian, Ivan Petrovitch.

Lionel Barrymore, M-G-M ace director, gives a bit of fatherly advice to Ruth Chatterton and her husband, Ralph Forbes, who just recently were reconciled, after a long and somewhat bitter separation. Absence must have made this pair of hearts grow fonder, for they now seem content to live happily ever after.

Fashionable Constance Bennett

¶ As usual, the younger set is looking to Constance Bennett for the last word in Winter fashions. A mode for every moment of the day is presented in this brilliant review of Miss Bennett's wardrobe, photographed exclusively for SCREEN SECRETS Magazine in the Hollywood studios of Edwin Bower Hesser

Constance Bennett is always associated with exquisite fashion creations. Expert designers seem endowed with added inspiration when planning the wardrobe for this beautiful star. All that is charming and appealing in apparel increases tenfold on the person of Constance. So a glimpse into her stunning wardrobe is a joyful and worth while event. In making her selection of an outfit for general town wear, Miss Bennett chooses a slim, straight coat of flat black caracul, with high crush collar of silver fox. A small black velvet hat and slippers of the same tone complete the costume.

For dinner, dancing and the opera, Constance revels in lustrous satins and furs. Her pet evening frock is fashioned of crepe-backed satin, the bodice being made on straight simple lines, with the skirt falling in cascades from the fitted hip-line almost to the ground. Her wrap is of the same satin, with high standing collar and border of Russian Sable. Evening slippers of egg-shell and gold-brocade are worn with it and the only ornaments are a triple strand of pearls and a black pearl ring.

Constance in her favorite night gown of flesh colored satin and d'Angleterre lace.

Dictates the Winter Vogue

¶Constance Bennett, daughter of the famous stage family, has long been an arbiter of fashions, setting the vogue for smartly dressed young women from Hollywood to Palm Beach. A Paris divorce from Phil Plant, millionaire sportsman, has won her freedom to return to the the screen as a reigning favorite.

Miss Bennett breakfasts in a charming breakfast coat that matches her robe de nuit.

For an afternoon tea, the captivating Constance selects another stunning costume. It is a fetching short-coated ensemble of dark green flat crepe, with collar and cuffs of deep rose-beige fox. The alluring coat is fastened with tiny bows at both neck and waist, while the skirt has a cluster at the left side. A snug soliel hat in the same hunters' green, and moire oxfords in the same shade, complete the outfit, with which she carries a green moire handbag and beige suede pull-on gloves.

Constance believes in taking advantage of the year-round California sunshine and wear light-colored sports clothes throughout the year—even during these months when most of us are shivering. For shopping and early morning hours, she chooses a print ensemble in tones of beige, with flowered design of brick-red shaded to henna. The waist-line is slightly high, while the hip-length jacket proves it is still a contender for fashion honors. With this outfit, Miss Bennet wears a beige felt hat in the off-the-face mode and strapped slippers of beige doeskin.

An Engaging Miss

¶ A most-engaged-but-never-wed girl tells just when to say the fatal "yes" in matrimony.

SINCE Constance Talmadge got herself all married and everything, Sally Eilers looms up as Hollywood's most engaged girl. She takes engagements seriously. Her love creed is this:

Do not wed too hastily. Become engaged, then wait. A short engagement is valueless; it should last for several months. If, at the end of six months, you still love, respect and admire each other, you are safe in confronting a minister and saying "I do."

Sally Eilers is an exceptionally clever girl. She is a quick thinker and an impulsive doer. It is a perverse streak in her nature that she should be slow-acting about marriage. The trait is not difficult to understand when it is realized that, despite her short skirts and bobbed hair and yo-do-de-do-do mannerisms, Sally is old-fashioned.

JOKE with Sally about the movies, war, golf, pretty legs, books or soda pop and she will bandy quip for quip. Tease her about love and matrimony and homes and babies and she becomes 100 per cent serious. Marriage is her dream and the alarm clock has not rung. Babies are her weakness; she loves them, clean or coated with molasses candy.

Sally's first engagement was to Matty Kemp. Six months after they met, they announced their engagement. Another six months and they bombshelled Hollywood by declaring everything off.

Of course, Sally and Matty were heart-broken—for a short while. But there were other men and other girls. Matty soon found solace in the company of Ruth Elder. Sally met William Hawks, a broker, well-to-do and an excellent golfer and sportsman.

Sally Eilers, the gal whose sweet "yes" to her suitors soured to "no" after Sally pondered during engagements.

"So I gave Bill back his ring," says Sally Eilers, remarking on the end of her romance with William Hawks, Los Angeles stock broker. Just when, as the above picture suggests, the two seemed very eager to exchange vows at the altar.

SALLY and Bill met at the Fox studio when she was working in Dry Martini. Kenneth Hawks, Bill's brother, supervised that picture and was the means of introduction. Soon after they met, the Hawks brothers gave an aeroplane party to which they invited several couples. Bill asked Sally if she would go and she accepted.

"My romance with Bill was deeper than my first," Sally avows. "He was older than Matty and more substantial. He was strong in character. He was the brisk business man type, a type I had not known previously. I enjoyed hearing him talk about stocks and bonds, about bear markets and bull movements, about buying on margins and pyramiding.

"Bill and I planned to marry. I started a hope chest. Then we talked over the matter of my career. I learned that Bill did not like the idea of his wife working, but he was nice about it. He said I might

The GOLD DIGGERS of BROADWAY

in 100% NATURAL COLOR

Not content with past triumphs, Warner Bros., the pioneers in talking pictures, have provided an unbelievably prodigal array of the most sensational effects ever evolved by the theatre and by motion pictures.

Picture a profuse procession of revue spectacle scenes in amazing settings . . . superbly staged chorus dancing numbers . . . the flashing wit and sparkling songs of Winnie Lightner...the charm of Nancy Welford...the astounding dancing of Ann Pennington . . . the crooning of Nick Lucas . . . love scenes as only Conway Tearle can play them . . . a parade of twelve headline players in the leading roles of a story that had New York gasping and giggling for one solid year . . . and you have only begun to imagine the treat that is in store for you.

One hundred per cent Color, an additional feature of Vitaphone all-talking pictures, assures Vitaphone's supremacy. It doubles the "life-likeness" of this most vivid and enjoyable of all talking pictures.

Look for the thrill of a lifetime the day you see "Gold Diggers of Broadway"...And look for the Vitaphone sign when you're looking for talking picture entertainment —always!

Big Ha-ha Man Finds Voice

He faces crooks and murderers in hilarious combat, but when it comes to germs—Harold retires to his tub and hot water.

"He loves me, he loves me not," repeats lovable Barbara Kent as she expectantly pulls off the petals of that love oracle, the daisy, while Harold Lloyd witnesses the performance with an assuring smile. He knows for certain what the answer should be, does this diffident lover, but he is too timid to tell. Barbara is Harold's new sweetheart in his first talking feature-comedy, called "Welcome Danger".

Harold Lloyd finds himself in a tight spot in his first talking picture, "Welcome Danger." Looks like the Orientals have him trapped, but the canny Lloyd always has a laugh up his sleeve, so he comes out smiling after breaking up a bold band of Chinese gangsters. His assailants do not even suspect that, for once, Harold has nothing under his hat.

Professional Comment

EDMUND LOWE, who is starring in The Cockeyed World, recently met a friend on the street, who asked him about the filming of In Old Arizona.

"The thing that most impressed me," said the friend, "was the braying of the donkey. That was a wonderful donkey. I don't see how they got the donkey to bray that way. There was something almost human about it."

"Perhaps they got one of the actors to do the braying," replied Lowe, "you know there are asses in all professions."

How It's Done

VITAPHONE talkies use records for producing music, sound and talking. The records are operated from the projection room of the theatre by the operator. The mechanism that operates the records is attached to the motion picture machine by means of gears, shafts, turntable and a special motor that operates the projection machine at a speed of ninety feet of film per minute and operates the record at the same time at a speed of thirty-three and one-third r.p.m. The records are sixteen inches in diameter and run about ten minutes. The record and film must both start at the same time. The record is the same, only larger and does not run as fast, as used in an ordinary phonograph, only the reproducer with needle is started from the inside of the record and not the outside as with ordinary phonograph record.

The reproducer consists of a needle holder attached to a small armature which is balanced on knife edges in an air-gap between poles of a permanent magnet. This reproducer is enclosed in a metal housing which is attached to one end of the reproducer mounting. The other end of the mounting is supported in such a manner that it is free to swing in a horizontal plane as the reproducer travels from the inner edge of the record (the reproducer swings in exactly the same manner that your phonograph arm swings.) Electric wires which form the electrical connection to the reproducer are brought out at the rear of the reproducer mounting thence to the amplifying equipment.

The function of the amplifying equipment is to increase weak vibratory currents produced or generated by the reproducer to a point where they have sufficient strength to produce the required volume of sound when converted into sound waves by loud speaker units (horns). These horns are mounted in back of the projection screen. Certain horns are used for speaking and orchestras. The amplifying equipment operates just like the audio amplifier on a radio.

On the record is an arrow and the needle must be set at this point when starting record. On the film is a frame (size of picture) which designates starting point of reel (film). Both start at the same instant.

The microphone holds no terrors for Zita Johann, newly imported from Broadway, from whence M-G-M enticed her to Hollywood for service in the talkies.

Lyrics a la Carte

RADIO Pictures needed a new song hit for Rio Rita and needed it in a hurry. Harry Tierney, composer, wrote the melody, but a melody was useless without lyrics. Undaunted, Mr. Tierney called Joe McCarthy, lyric writer, in New York City.

"Say, Joe, this is Tierney. We have to have a new song right away for Bert Wheeler and Dorothy Lee. It's their closing number in Rio Rita. You know what Bert looks like, rather short and cute. Well, Dorothy is small, dark and peppy. Here's the melody. Hold the wire." And he played the melody on the piano for McCarthy.

"Got it?" Mr. Tierney asked.

"No," came the voice from New York, "Play it once more."

Mr. Tierney played it again, "Okeh, Harry," said McCarthy, "I have it!"

The next morning a night letter arrived at the RKO studio containing the lyrics for We Need Each Other and less than an hour later Mr. Wheeler and Miss Lee were singing it before the microphone.

Screen's First Operetta

THE talking screen's first original operetta is to be a sort of international affair. The story is by a Hungarian (Ernest Vajda), the libretto is by an American (Guy Bolton), the lyrics are by an Englishman (Clifford Grey), a Frenchman (Maurice Chevalier) is starred, a German (Ernst Lubitsch) is directing, and the cast includes an Italian (Albert Roccardi), a Welshman (Albert De Winton), a Czecho-Slovakian (Anto Vaverka), a daughter of Spain (Marcita Voya), and a Canadian (Frank Martin)! Lupino Lane (another Englishman) and Lillian Roth and Jeanette MacDonald (American) will be in the international cast.

Blind Entertained by Talkies

TALKING pictures were proved a marvelous invention for the entertainment of the blind through a test staged recently at the Paramount studio.

Earl Houk, a young man who has been sightless since infancy, sat through a showing of The Man I Love, an all-dialogue picture. At the conclusion of continue if I insisted. Marriage means a supreme sacrifice for one or the other; either Bill had to give up an ideal or I had to retire. We talked it over frankly and decided not to marry. So I gave Bill back his ring."

A YOUNG insurance man, Harvey Priester, who heads his own business and probably insures more Hollywood actors and actresses than any other one company, was Sally's next rumored fiancé. They met at the First National studio. The studio officials ordered insurance on her. Priester accompanied the examining physician to the studio and was introduced to Sally.

Their's was attraction at first sight. Sally dined with Harvey that night. They visited a theater the next evening. On the following day, Sunday, Harvey and Sally motored to a distant town and lunched at a romantic Spanish inn. The next week they spent six evenings together. Sally had to work the seventh, but she had dinner with Harvey before she went to the studio.

"Harvey is a wonderful dancer and terribly romantic," Sally says. "He is daring. He drives his white, sport automobile like mad. He does everything dashingly. He swept me off my feet in a daze. We were never engaged. Although Harvey and I went places together and liked each other, we never once spoke of marriage. We were just good pals. We still are."

When one has the reputation of being engaged often, as has Sally, a new rumor begins each time she is seen with a different boy friend. For instance, it was whispered that Sally was engaged to Eddie Sutherland, a Paramount director. It was next reported that Harry D'Arrast, also a director, was the lucky man. Sally denied these rumors.

MY NEXT engagement will end with marriage," she states with determination. "I mean, my next public engagement. I do not intend announcing anything publicly until I have been engaged long enough privately to know that I have found the right man."

Sally and her former fiancés are still good friends. She dines or visits theaters and dances with all of them. And, strangely enough, Matty likes Bill and Harvey, and Bill likes the other two fellows, and Harvey thinks there is none like Matty and Bill.

That speaks well for Sally's good sportsmanship and for her choice of suitors.

Who knows, she may return to Matty or Bill or Harvey some day and marry him.

He, whichever of the three, would be a lucky man.

Make-Up Magic

Is This the Beauty Secret of the Screen Stars?

Can Every Woman Double Her Beauty With Make-Up?

Read the Answer by Hollywood's Make-Up King—Max Factor

"WHAT we have discovered in pictures about beauty, about make-up, about cosmetics ...every woman should know. True! Make-Up is magic...but the wand of make-up is not so magical, so mysterious that every woman cannot wave it over herself and produce in her own likeness the vision of beauty she has always dreamed of." And then Max Factor, Hollywood's genius of make-up, creator of make-up for the leading motion picture stars, told me the secrets of make-up which every woman will want to know.

Joan Crawford, M-G-M Star of "Our Dancing Daughters" discusses with Max Factor her color harmony in make-up for evening wear.

If you would double your beauty. . listen . . ! In Hollywood, leading screen stars are using a new kind of make-up for social and evening wear. It is based on cosmetic color harmony—conceded to be the greatest beauty discovery of the age. Max Factor's genius developed it, as only he could ...for no other person has had the unique and valuable experience of being beauty advisor to the stars since the days of one-reel features. From this experience has come faultless beauty in make-up. Color harmonies in powder, rouge, lipstick and other make-up essentials that produce the most exquisite, life-like beauty effect imaginable, blending in perfect harmony with complexion colorings and personalities.

(Center) Josephine Dunn, M-G-M Star of "The Singing Fool" finds glorious beauty in her own color harmony make-up suggested by Max Factor.

Lupe Velez, United Artists Star featured in "The Gaucho" enthuses about the mystery and fascination Max Factor gives to the eyes with make-up.

And each star has her own individual color harmony, too—just the exact shades in each essential to blend into a make-up ensemble exactly suited to her own individual self—suggested by Max Factor to accentuate the allure of natural beauty. No wonder millions silently applaud the fascinating beauty of the stars.

And now, good news for you and every reader. Max Factor offers to send to you your own individual complexion analysis and make-up chart; also a copy of his book, "The New Art of Make-Up". CUPID'S BULLETIN

JAMES HALL and Merna Kennedy at present hold the record for long-term engagements in Hollywood. The whole movie colony is wondering just when they are planning to take the fatal step, as it seems like one of the most enduring of romances.

Merna Kennedy

Serious Comedy

AL ST. JOHN, well-known film comic, has been given the choice of paying his former wife $1,642 back alimony, or spending an indeterminate time on the road gang, working his fine out.

The actor has been unable to work, due to the Equity tie-up, but now is about to start on a new picture, so most likely things will be ironed out to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Cupid Makes Good

FRANCES MARION, well-known scenarist, and George Hill, director, will be married soon, according to rumors rampant in Hollywood at present. While neither will make a statement, Miss Marion is wearing a solitaire—and we all know what that implies. Cupid first predicted this wedding in the October issue of SCREEN SECRETS.

Roping the Bull

BOOL" MONTANA, that scholarly gentleman with the Oxford (Italy) accent, and the vegetable ears, has been led to the altar by Mary Poulson, twenty-three and blond, who stands nearly six feet tall, and is as pretty as "Bool" isn't. After the wedding the couple departed for a short honeymoon trip. When Mary gazed on the face that has haunted many a picture, it was a case of love at first sight.

Music Hath Charmed

AND now what do you think, folks?

Rudy Vallee, New York's famous night club orchestra leader, is courting none other than Mary Brian. They've been seen together quite frequently since Vallee's arrival in Hollywood to make a talker at the RKO Studios, but, as usual, Miss Brian denies an engagement.

GERTRUDE ASTOR and Maurice Costello, both of whom are old-timers in the film world, are being seen together quite a lot these days, and a handsome couple they do make—Gertrude with her golden hair and stately figure and Maurice with his near-white locks and perfect profile. Busy Dame Rumor has it that the affair may reach a happy conclusion.

Jones-Lentz Nuptials

DIRECTOR F. RICHARD JONES, who directed Ronald Colman in Bulldog Drummond, and Miss Irene Lentz, Hollywood fashion designer, are busy denying that they are to be married soon. Both have departed for business trips to New York, therefore, the rumor. They have been going together for several years.

Rift in Gilbert Romance?

ABYSMAL silence shrouds the outcome of the honeymoon spat between John Gilbert, famous screen Lothario, and his bride, Ina Claire. 'Tis said the quarrel arose over Ina's staying out too late at a party to which Jack did not care to go. All that is known is that Jack packed up and went away in one direction, while the fair Ina departed in another.

The Boy She Left Behind

Janet returned to Hollywood a few days later wearing Lydell's pin. Then a big diamond appeared on her finger. Lydell had given it to her.

But she held back on a public announcement of her betrothal.

"I don't want anything said about it until we are actually married," she told her intimates, who interpreted her words to mean that she wasn't quite sure—that she still might wed Charlie Farrell.

Then opened the battle for the heart and hand of the demure Janet.

When she and Charlie were not working in the same picture, they at least were in the same studio. That, one might imagine, would give her screen mate the inside track. But that was not the case. Despite the fact that his work necessitated his living in Oakland and 'Frisco, Lydell wasn't kept away from the city of films.

He discovered that airplanes offered a means of rapid transit between the Golden Gate and Movietown. He purchased one of his own. He spent his week-ends at Fox Hills. And he was there at other times.

CHARLIE, admittedly, was worried, but he kept up the fight. His mother, who had been visiting him and was about to return to her home in the East, knew what was uppermost in Charlie's mind and prolonged her stay.

Then came the start of "shooting" on Lucky Star, in which Janet and Charlie once more made love in the land of make-believe. But they found time—well, perhaps they were rehearsing for the next day's scenes, but they made love, too, when the cameras weren't grinding.

Upon the heels of Lucky Star came Sunnyside Up, and again Janet and Charlie co-starred. Janet said "yes" beneath the microphones. She said "yes" again on her own front porch one evening after working hours.

Charlie was the happiest boy in twenty states. He broke the news to his mother. She, too, was elated, for she was very fond of Janet.

Charlie and Virginia Valli have been close friends since his early days in California. Virginia was a star when Charlie was supplying atmosphere.

VIRGINIA is two or three years older than Charlie, and she has had broad experience on the stage as well as on the screen. She was a big help to him as he climbed up the ladder that led to stardom.

So, during those periods when Janet wasn't "speaking" to him, he turned to Virginia for consolation.

It wasn't so long ago, but I cannot recall whether it was during one of the "off" or the "on" moments in his romance with Janet, that Charlie, discussing Virginia, said this:

"She is kindly, sympathetic, she is calm, peaceful. It is restful just to be in her company."

Meaningful words these, in view of recent events!

Then it was only natural that Charlie, after informing his mother that Janet had agreed, should hurry to Virginia's home that she might know before the announcement appeared in the newspapers.

That's just what Charlie did. At least Janet heard that he did.

A telegram was dispatched from Hollywood to Oakland. It was signed by Janet.

Next day, Sunnyside Up, having been completed, the little star, accompanied by her mother, boarded a train for the northern city. There she and Lydell obtained a marriage license. Five days later they were married and en route to Honolulu.

She and Charlie did not meet again.

THE night before Janet went to the altar, Charlie boarded a train for the East. He wasn't the joyous Chico we saw in the final fade-out of Seventh Heaven.

Whether these two youngsters who rose to fame and fortune hand in hand ever work together again is problematical. Janet's contract with Fox is reported to have been renewed, and Charlie will go on with his career at the same studio. Perhaps some day another girl will steal his heart. But I doubt it—

Chico was a one-woman man!

Footsteps by the Sea

I HAVE reached the place
In life's ambition
Where fear for my future
Has blurred my vision.
The reflection in my mirror
Shows a worry-worn face,
Ever-pleading to the Power
That guides us through space,
To call my job finished:
Give me release:
Take urge from my soul
That my brain may have peace.
And my footsteps can wander
Down to the sea,
With a heart that is light
And a body that is free.

Backtrailing Movie History

Movie personalities and developments of a decade or so ago

MARY MILES MINTER was the first screen player to sign a contract running over one million dollars.

Ten years ago, when Mary Pickford deserted Famous Players-Lasky to produce her own pictures, Adolph Zukor decided to groom Mary Miles Minter as her successor.

Her contract called for three pictures a year at $1,000,000 per annum and was to run for three years.

Fourteen years ago, A Fool There Was established Theda Bara as a star. She won the part over Valeska Suratt, Madeline Traverse and Virginia Pearson. Her real name was Theodosia Goodman, but she was appearing on the stage under the name of De Coppett. Frank Powell, director, discovered her and started one of the greatest publicity stories of all time. He gave her the name of Theda Bara and advertised her as being "born of a French artist and his Arabian mistress on the sands of the Sahara."

Eugene O'Brien was leading man to Norma Talmadge ten years ago.

Even very popular stage stars have their crushes, and Madge Bellamy, playing on the "boards" in such successes as Dear Brutus, All for Love, and other productions, was no exception. Madge considered Geraldine Farrar the most beautiful, fascinating woman in the world, and yearned to meet—yea, even to catch one good glimpse of her. When Thomas Ince approached Madge to suggest a screen test, he cannily dropped the hint that he had Geraldine Farrar under contract, and that he would give Madge a part with her cherished idol. The Riddle Woman was Madge's first screen appearance.

David Wark Griffith had made the close-up the topic of conversation in Hollywood a decade ago.

Sixteen years ago Roscoe Arbuckle left the stage and signed a starring contract with Mack Sennett. Four years later he entered into a partnership with Joseph Schenck, which gave Arbuckle a Famous Players release for his comedies.

Yes, and what a whale of a difference just a few years make. Here's a scene from an ancient film heart throbber, "Under Two Flags." Claire Wentney is consoling the deep-orbed Theda Bara, who, in the role of Cigarette, has probably just failed in a blindfold test.

Twenty years ago, a little sixteen-year-old girl in San Diego scribbled the outline of a story on a sheet of paper and called the story The New York Hat. She mailed it to The Manager of Biograph Studios, New York City. A director saw the story—there was a part in it that exactly fitted a young man he had met at a luncheon the day before. There was also a good part for a certain young lady already in pictures.

The little girl who wrote the story was mailed a check for $15—her name was Anita Loos—the director was D. W. Griffith—the leading man was Lionel Barrymore and the star was Mary Pickford.

Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks were "keepin' company" ten years ago.

Twenty-one years ago, David Wark Griffith, living in New York City, found it necessary to take a business trip to Chicago. While in Chicago he saw movies made for the first time.

Filled with interest in the new art, he wrote down a few plots. When he returned to New York he took these plots to the Biograph Company. They were accepted and Mr. Griffith became plot writer for that company.

A short while later he became a director and in 1914, he directed Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Marguerite Fischer, Henry B. Walthall and George Siegmann in The Birth of a Nation.

A recent showing of this old picture in Hollywood proved it is still looked upon as one of the greatest pictures ever made.

Ten years ago, Viola Dana used to startle Hollywood by stunt flying with Lieutenant Omar Locklear at the Cecil de Mille aviation field in Culver City.

Did you know that: The National Board of Censors was established in 1908, as a result of pictures teeming with crime, vulgarity, and every kind of atrocity . . . Alma Rubens was leading woman in Douglas Fairbanks' first big hit, The Half Breed . . . Johnny Hines made his first stage appearance as one of the Mischievous Twins in School Days, Gus Edwards' first popular revue, almost 20 years ago? Shirley Mason played child leads at the Edison Studios in the Bronx, New York City, when she was 11 years old . . . Among her pictures were Her Royal Highness, Mary Had a Little Lamb, The Little Chevalier, and The Awakening of Ruth . . . Clara Bow got $50 a week for her initial motion picture rôle, and her scene was cut out of the picture . . . Down to the Sea in Ships was the title, and it was directed by Elmer Clifton, once a popular motion picture juvenile actor. Clara is reported to be drawing $2,500 every week.

Gary Cooper's Dream Girl

The screen hero truly believes that sooner or later his path will cross that of his ideal and that they will wed.

"I know we shall be happy," he declared, "for she will be a pal as well as a wife. That is the big secret of successful marriage as I see it.

"The first three years I was in Hollywood, I did not go about with any girl. One reason was that I was too busy trying to get somewhere with my film career. The other was that I did not come across one who really interested me.

"Then I met Evelyn Brent and we went around together a lot until she married Harry Edwards. Evelyn is a spirited girl and I enjoy being in her company. At no time, however, could it have been said that we were in love with one another.

LUPE and I were introduced at a dinner party, and we've been running around ever since. Lupe has that same fiery soul that I found in Evelyn. She is an interesting companion—never monotonous. I think a great deal of her, for we have had some wonderful times together. But we will not marry."

I suggested to Gary that it was little wonder the world thought he was serious in his attentions to Lupe when on last Christmas day he represented her with a costly dining room set.

"That meant nothing," explained the blushing Gary. "Lupe was the only girl to whom I gave a Yuletide gift last year. She does not care for jewelry and she had just purchased a new home. I thought the dining set was a practical and sensible gift."

It was at this point that Victor Fleming, the director, summoned Gary for a close-up in which he held Mary Brian in fond embrace, breathing words of love into her ear. But they were words intended for the microphone and not for little Mary.

"Wait a minute, there's one thing I want to add to that interview," Gary called to me over Mary's shoulder.

I waited.

"Tell your readers this: If you ever hear of me furnishing an entire house for a girl, it will mean that I have found this dream lady and that a wedding is near at hand," said Gary.

Talking Stars

Talking stars!
These are the stars for me!
Talking stars!
Stars we can hear and see!
Silver voices, tones of gold,
Brighter than the stars of old!
The stars we hear
Are more near, more dear,
Smiling, walking, talking stars!

Speechless...When a Few Words Would Have Made Me!

But now I can face the largest audience without a trace of stage fright

THE annual banquet of our Association—the biggest men in the industry present—and without a word of warning the Chairman called on me to speak—and my mind went blank!

I half rose from my seat, bowed awkwardly and mumbled, "I'm afraid you'll have to excuse me today," and dropped back in my chair.

Speechless—when a few words would have made me! The opportunity I had been waiting for all my life—and I had thrown it away! If I could have made a simple little speech—giving my opinion of trade conditions in a concise, witty, interesting way, I know I would have been made for life!

Always I had been a victim of paralyzing stage fright. Because of my timidity, my diffidence, I was just a nobody with no knack of impressing others—of putting myself across. No matter how hard I worked it all went for nothing—I could never win the big positions, the important offices, simply because I was tongue tied in public.

And then like magic I discovered how to overcome my stage fright—and I was amazed to learn that I actually had a natural gift for public speaking. With the aid of a splendid new method I rapidly developed this gift until in a ridiculously short time, I was able to face giant audiences—without a trace of stage fright.

Today I am one of the biggest men in our industry. Scarcely a meeting or banquet is held without me being asked to speak. I am asked to conferences, luncheons and banquets as a popular after-dinner speaker. This amazing training has made me into a self-confident, aggressive talker—an easy, versatile conversationalist—almost overnight.

* * * *

No matter what work you are now doing or what may be your station in life; no matter how timid and self-conscious you now are when called upon to speak, you can quickly bring out your natural ability and become a powerful speaker. Now, through an amazing new home study training you can quickly shape yourself into an outstanding, influential speaker able to dominate one man or five thousand.

Jack Mulhall

Jack Mulhall

THE bearded Smith Brothers of cough-drop fame and Jack Mulhall all hail from Wappingers Falls, New York State. Jack's father was Irish and his mother, Scotch. Mulhall was embarked upon his stage career in a Ned Wayburn production called The Producer. After this engagement he tried the movies playing bits at the old Edison Studio at Fort Lee, New Jersey. Several months later, Jack played a bit in Hal Reid's Hard Cash and made such a hit that he was signed by Biograph. A juvenile lead with Blanche Sweet in The House of Discord, sent him to Hollywood to become a regular leading man. He has recently re-signed with First National Pictures to be started in comedy-drama. Jack Mulhall is six feet tall, has blond curly hair and blue eyes and he's married.

Merna Kennedy

Merna Kennedy

MERNA KENNEDY was born in Kankakee, Illinois, in 1908. Merna sang and danced on the Pantages circuit at the age of nine, and immediately afterward took a like act over the Orpheum circuit, winding up in Los Angeles. When she was but thirteen years old, she and her friend, Lita Grey, stopped into a corner drug store for a soda and met Charles Chaplin. Years afterward, Lita became the great comedian's wife, and Merna his leading lady. After appearing opposite Mr. Chaplin in The Circus, she was signed by Carl Laemmle, Jr., to play the lead in Broadway. She is still under contract to Universal Pictures Corporation. Merna is twenty-one years old, she lives with her mother and one brother. She is five feet two and one-half inches tall.

Ann Harding

Ann Harding

ANN HARDING just became bored with being the society daughter of a United States Army officer and suddenly determined on having a career of her own. She chose business, but after a time she decided that a woman's progress in office work was rather slow and uncertain. She turned to the theater and began a series of engagements throughout the West as a stock player. She followed up her successes with Stolen Fruit, The Woman Disputed and finally her sensational triumph, The Trial of Mary Dugan. Two years ago, she married Harry Bannister and when he was sent West to play in The Strange Interlude. Ann preceded him to make a home for him during the duration of the play. She is now under contract to Pathé for talking pictures. Ann Harding is five feet two inches in height.

Richard Dix

Richard Dix

RICHARD DIX was born in St. Paul, Minnesota. While attending the University of Minnesota, Dix was so impressed with the stage that he became a member of the St. Paul Stock Company. Later, Dix went to New York City and went out on the road with a stock company. Then he became a matinee idol in the Morosco Stock Company in Los Angeles. In 1919, Jeanie MacPherson, scenario writer for Cecil B. de Mille, secured a screen test for Mr. Dix and although he was offered a part in pictures, he preferred the stage and went back to New York. Later he took another screen test and was given a contract by Samuel Goldwyn. His more recent pictures are The Wheel of Life and Nothing But the Truth. He recently signed a long term contract with RKO. Richard Dix is six feet tall, and weighs 180 pounds.

John Boles

John Boles

GREENVILLE, TEXAS, is the birthplace of John Boles, who has become one of the screen's most outstanding stars. While attending the University of Texas, he was chosen by his instructor as one of the best singers in school and toured the middle west in chautauqua. One day Oscar Seagle, singing master from New York City heard John's voice. He prevailed upon John to accompany him to New York. He later studied voice in Europe. When his funds ran low he returned to New York and secured the male lead in Little Jessie James. He next appeared in a William A. Brady production called Kitty's Kisses. In this rôle he attracted the attention of Gloria Swanson who chose him for her leading man in Sunya. Boles then came to Hollywood.

Renee Adoree

Renee Adoree

SOME years ago, a little circus traveling in wagons, paused at Lille, France, for a performance. On that day a new performer was added to the troupe—a baby girl, born to the star of the circus owner and his wife. They called her Renée Adorée. As soon as the little Renée could toddle she was added to the act. When the Germans invaded Belgium, Renée was appearing in Brussels as a headliner. There was a panic and Renée escaped to England under cover of darkness, thence to the United States. In 1920 she arrived in Los Angeles to play opposite Tom Moore, which led to a series of rôles that eventually climaxed in Melisande in The Big Parade. She recently appeared with John Gilbert in his first talking picture, Redemption. Miss Adorée is five feet one inch tall.

Caught on the Rebound

her former swain, for when Greta arrived at a New York hotel on her return voyage, she was met with the information that the long distance operator had a call for her from a certain Mr. Gilbert in Hollywood. The languorous Swede elected to rest three hours before talking. However, the conversation, even if delayed, must have been satisfactory, for John was on hand to greet Greta when she arrived in Los Angeles. The two went together to several social affairs in the following fortnight, notably a huge costume ball given by Basil Rathbone and Ouida Bergere. One Los Angeles writer, apparently gifted with prophecy as well as discernment, commented upon the fact that Greta did not dance at all and was quite aloof during the evening, while John was very attentive to Ina Claire, whom he had met a few days previously. Two weeks later the pair eloped to Las Vegas, Nevada, and were married, while Greta secluded herself on a friend's yacht near Catalina.

Now, I still think that John Gilbert and Ina Claire are in love with each other. Nevertheless, I wouldn't go so far as to say that their marriage does anything to change my conviction that the best time to get a man is on the rebound.

EVERYONE has read of the reconciliation between Roy D'Arcy and his former wife. About a year ago the lady in question divorced her erstwhile spouse, and the screen heavy was seen everywhere in company with Lita Grey Chaplin. Heavy devotion was registered on all occasions, and while neither would actually affirm that marriage would take place as soon as the D'Arcy divorce was final, they would not deny it. But Lita received a vaudeville offer and started on a tour of several months. Bereft of the companionship he had enjoyed so constantly for several months, Roy evidently turned for comfort to his former wife, with the result that the two were remarried in Agua Caliente just before Lita returned to her Hollywood home.

Although Buddy Rogers and Mary Brian are not married yet, they go about together constantly and certainly exhibit interest in each other. Just a little while ago, Buddy was quite inconsolable over the rift in his romance with Claire Windsor, after he had squired the radiant blonde for more than a year. Now, he is not at all the picture of a broken-hearted youth.

It is said that Gary Cooper was not feeling too happy about Evelyn Brent's friendship for Harry Edwards, which ended in marriage, when the Mexican siren, Lupe Velez, first hove on his horizon. Well, Lupe certainly got her man, whether it was on the rebound or not.

Nor are the screen lovers of 1929 the only examples of this trusty old theory. It is well known that Rudolph Valentino was bitterly unhappy over the debacle of his marriage with Jean Acker until he met the grave and poised Natacha Rambova, whom, despite the wreck of their marriage, many of his friends believe to have been the real adoration of his life.

NEITHER are women immune from the bait of new love catch them on the rebound from amorous or marital disaster. Pola Negri found consolation for her grief over the death of Rudolph Valentino in the tender friendship of Serge M'dvani, whom she married less than a year after she had donned widow's weeds for her departed fiancé. I have been told that when Joan Crawford met Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., there was a bad little dent on her heart placed there by certain derelictions on the part of a former suitor, whom most people believed to be James Hall.

Phyllis Haver loved William Seaman, whom she recently married, enough to give up her screen career—for a time—for him, and greater proof than this can be asked of no film actress. Yet there are many people in Hollywood who know that, only a short time before she met Mayor James Walker's pal and for reasons she never made public, Phyllis ended a five years' friendship with Stephen Gosson, a young film art director whom everyone expected her to wed. Florence Vidor and George Fitzmaurice had "gone together" long enough to become almost a legend in the village of Hollywood. But one day each was found to be going his separate way. Next thing, the well-known director was seen beauing about Diane Kane, Lois Wilson's sister, and soon they were married.

Did Florence pull down the shades and weep in her darkened boudoir? She did not. With a sophisticated haircut and a lot of new clothes, the patrician Miss Vidor visited New York, and the first thing her home town knew, its beautiful Florence was a bride herself, wedding Jascha Heifetz, the world-famous violinist.

But why go on? If you are in love, of course you know that you can never—positively, my dear—care for anyone else. If you are freshly disillusioned, you will read this and weep afresh to think that anyone could imagine you getting over unhappiness that easy—

Until—

Someone gets you on the rebound!

Let SCREEN SECRETS be your guide in your quest for authoritative information about your favorite film folk.

POSTAL POUCH

The Postal Pouch editor will answer in this department any questions concerning movies. For a personal reply, enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope in your letter.

We're Lonely, Too

LONESOME LOU: Gee, so'm I; so let's put our heads together and make a block pavement! Actresses are born, not made? Be careful of that word "made," Lou. Write to Dorothy Janis at M-G-M, Culver City. She is seventeen years old, and is plain American with a dash of Cherokee Indian. Mary Pickford is Canadian. Doug's latest picture is The Taming of the Shrew. The greatest star in Hollywood? Well, somebody once said it was Tom Mix's horse; but the only thanks he got was a black eye.

Recipe

BETTY D.: Yes, Clara Bow had a light touch of the flu, but she did not die. Madge Bellamy had the flu, too, and several others. Better ring up the hospitals for the complete sick list—I haven't it. I don't know Buddy Rogers' home address—no, honest! I've sent all my mash notes to him at the Paramount Studios. Mary Brian is almost twenty-two years old now—growing up! June Collyer has never been married, but that's not from lack of opportunities a-plenty. Buddy is just six feet tall. His "masterpiece" in pictures? All of 'em, say I. But he first won recognition in My Best Girl, opposite Mary Pickford. What do I look like? A horned toad dressed up like a devil and drawn through a knothole—at least that's what I overheard somebody say about me when they didn't know I was tuning in. Forget your movie aspirations, Betty Dee. You sound mighty delectable, charming, and all that sort of thing; but to get into the movies these days you've got to be a magician, a contortionist, an exiled Spanish queen, speak ten languages, dance the highland fling, and own an aquaruim. Stenography is safer if you want to make a living.

Welcome

I'M BROKE: You must be my twin brother. Johnny Mack Brown was born in Dotham, Alabama, September 1, 1904. He is six feet tall, weighs 165, and has brown hair. He was a famous football player for his university, before M-G-M signed him on the dotted line. Nils Asther is engaged to Vivian Duncan. Vilma Banky was born on January 9, 1902. Write to her at United Artists, Hollywood. Your first visit to the Postal Pouch? Why, where have you been all my life? You'll have to come often to make up for lost time. The two-cent stamp is necessary only when you want a personal reply.

Another Carol Fan

K. O. H.: Sue Carol was born in Chicago, on October 30, about twenty-two years ago. How does she look to me? Gosh, only a babel of tongues could help me at a time like this—one language isn't enough. No, I don't think she needs a boy friend. Nick Stuart seems to be doing nicely, thank you. Wedding bells for them one of these days, maybe.

You Tell 'em! I Stutter

K-K-K-KATIE: Your girl-friend is going to sound just like that when you tell her that Dolores Del Rio played Charmaine in What Price Glory? That was, in fact, the Mexican star's first big picture rôle—the one that paved the way for other interesting rôles, just as Renée Adorée's work in The Big Parade put her foot on the ladder of fame. Forget the coffee and pistols at dawn, but make the mistaken g. f. buy you an almond bar and a stick of gum. You deserve to get a big rake-off like that for, after all, you did tell her so! Great little feeling—eh, Kay?

Colorful Correspondent

GREENIE BROWNIE: Just so you're not Pink-eye. We boys simply have to draw the line somewhere! So you're a Filipino, and descended from the Mayflower? But I'm afraid neither would help you get into pictures. You would have a better chance if you went into vaudeville with your sister, as many of the newest actresses are recruited from the "boards." Alice White is twenty-two, and Eddie Quillan, twenty-one. Now that you mentioned it, I do think they would be a wow together; but they work for different studios, you know. Sorry, but I can't tell you which stars answer their fan mail and which don't. You'll just have to do a little experimenting of your own.

School Daze

HARRIETTE K.: Ding, dong! The little red school house is now in session! Alvarado is pronounced Al-vah-rah-do; Novarro is No-vah-ro; Roland is Ró-land; Renée Adorée is Reé-nay A-do-ray —the "a" as in "cat"; and the "h" in Asther is silent like the "r" in "fish." Class dismissed—and thanks for the apple, dear child!

Boles Fans

PAT AND MAYO: Don't you mean Pat and Mike, the famous guys in the joke books? The "handsome guy" in We Americans was probably John Boles, who played the rôle of Hugh Bradleigh.

Buddy's His Model

R. F.: Three cheers for Buddy Rogers! You've picked a mighty fine ideal to grow up like—Buddy is true blue, unspoiled, and everything else nice. He is just twenty-five, and has had no stage experience. So many letters pour in to the various stars that it is impossible for them to read them all personally. Their secretaries usually select the most interesting for them to look over. Photographs are generally sent out from the fan mail departments of the various studios, and requests are filled in order of their arrival.

Let Me Explain

RICHARD S.: It was Mary Carr, not Margaret Mann, who played in Over the Hill. Great picture, wasn't it? Arnold Kent was killed in an auto accident in October, 1928, while Fred Thomson died on Christmas Day, 1928, of appendicitis. A character actor is one who plays "made up" rôles—elderly or comic parts, for example. A star is an actor who dominates a picture and the cast—like Marion Davies, Clara Bow, or Corinne Griffith. There are only about twenty stars in Hollywood, the rest being featured players—people with big box office names, but not yet stars. An "all-star" cast is one entirely composed of featured players, and no unimportant people. Yes, indeed, boys of fourteen take stage dancing; in fact, the longer you study, the sooner you'll be an expert hoofer. Sounds like a Scotch joke—but you know what I mean.

mumbling to himself or pass by on tiptoe so as not to spoil his before-breakfast rehearsal. Really, it's getting so now that if you can't sing or dance you are a wallflower at parties out here.

I'VE gotten so nobody invites me anywhere. They ask my ukelele out and I just go along to carry it. Speaking of ukes, just to show you how people are always stealing a guy's gags, I went over to Hawaii last summer and, by golly! when I got there the whole outfit was playing ukeleles.

Gosh, but you meet some swell people out here. Really, it's an inspiration to a fellow to be able to sit down with such brilliant minds, Charlie Chaplin, Cecil B. de Mille, Fred Niblo, Louis B. Mayer, Joseph Schenck, Gloria Swanson, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Zane Grey—that night we were all sitting together watching the opening of The Trial of Mary Dugan! of course a couple of thousand other people were there, too, but you get the idea.

Mentioning Mr. de Mille makes me think of the bathrooms they have out here. I slept in my heliotrope bathtub a whole week before I discovered it wasn't a Louis XIV bed. They have mirrors on the floors and rugs on the walls. The hot water faucet pours lemonade and the cold shower is iced seltzer. The bathroom is so big I usually call my directors' meetings and rehearse my new chorus numbers there while trying to decide whether or not to use the green towels and Palmolive soap or try and match the burnt orange washcloths with Lifebuoy.

And boy, the orange juice stands they have out here! You can step up and buy orange juice mixed with anything except oranges. They sell a lot of artichokes, too, but I never have any use for the darned things by the time I get through peeling them.

Well, I've got to hurry back to work. I'm in a Marion Davies picture now. Got a swell part.

(Note to Editor: I put this comment last, so that you can cut it off easily after the picture comes out of the cutting room.)

A Fighting Heart

YOU wrote a lyric on the happy heart,
Not knowing how far you were apart;
Not knowing it was a fighting heart
In hands of clay.

You have seen those hands hold the fighting heart
'Til anger in tears turned to tears of laughter.
And the two fools lived forever after, unit of production. He is now giving the Texans a break, having all his students take screen tests for parts in de Mille's next production. By the way, D. W. Griffith was in Texas last summer to select locations, etc., for the picture he is planning on shooting down here. Wish I had the time and space to tell you all about it.
Apart.

And did you know Pola Negri's prince is to marry a fellow Texan, Mary McCormick. But, before they marry, the prince must do two things. One is (naturally) to get a divorce. The other is to change his name to McDivan or something reasonable. Miss McCormick says she won't marry Prince M'dvani.

Miss McCormick is on the Riviera now and denies she stole him from Pola Negri. She says she has set her heart on a ranch and no love can pry her from that idea. She also said, "What's the use of being born in the loveliest part of America (Texas) and then end your life as a titled person."

And say—John Gilbert fans—your favorite takes the lace skillet for nervy and reckless publicity. When he and his bride, Ina Claire, started for Spain, he cabled King Alphonso to meet him in Barcelona. The King's remarks have not been made public.

Now a big "whoopee" for SCREEN SECRETS, the fans' magazine.

Sincerely,

T. G.

The "whoopee" is appreciated, but not half so much as your newsy and interesting letter. You certainly do get the news, and we hope to hear from you again.

Downers Grove, Ill.

Dear Editor:

You've answered so many other questions, so won't you answer mine?

It concerns my favorite boy actor, David Rollins. To me, he is the typical American boy. Does he smoke and is he stuck up? Does he really high hat interviewers?

Won't you give me a little biography of him? Where can I get his photo?

Yours sincerely,

R. H.

Your questions will be answered in an early issue of SCREEN SECRETS which will contain a revealing personality story on David Rollins. Send 25c to Fox Films Studio, Hollywood, for his picture.

Dear Editor:

My favorite star is Lupe Velez and I want to thank you for the publicity you have given to her. I am sure she will prove worthy of your praise by becoming one of the screen's foremost actresses.

Give the little girl a chance. One has to admit that Dolores Del Rio, herself does not dare make any more Spanish pictures since Lupe started on her road to fame.

Please publish more about Lupe.

Anxiously waiting,

L. L.

You will be more positive than ever that Lupe is an excellent actress after you see in this issue the pictures of Lupe's surprising mimicries of other stars.

Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Editor:

I enjoy reading your magazine very much.

Most of all, I enjoy the biographies of the stars. Why don't you have a biography of Richard Arlen?

I haven't seen many of his pictures (page size) in your magazine. Couldn't you have just one?

D. E. R.

To increase your enjoyment of SCREEN SECRETS, a biography of Richard Arlen will appear in an early forthcoming issue, and we promise to be on the watch for a good photograph of him.

Dear Editor:

Every time I read a life story of Gary Cooper I read the first thing about what a fine, quiet, home-loving youth he is. I also read that his "dream girl" is a refined, intelligent, sincere creature—a lady at all times.

Now tell me: is his present affair with Lupe Velez a serious one?

If it is, those authors are a bunch of darned liars!

Hoping you are the same,

F. E. C.

In this issue of SCREEN SECRETS, Gary Cooper reveals the qualifications which he thinks the ideal wife should meet. We will let you decide whether Lupe will qualify or has qualified.

Dear Editor:

Want to make a fan happy? Let's have more pictures in SCREEN SECRETS of John Mack Brown, Gary Cooper, Loretta Young, Anita Page, Barry Norton, John Darrow, Robert Castle, Ralph Forbes, Richard Arlen, Billie Dove, Phil Holmes, Charles Farrell and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.

Put more of these stars in the book instead of saps like John Gilbert. Hoping you'll do this.

Best wishes,

J. T.

Making fans happy is our aim in life. Most of these stars are pictured in this issue, and you'll find the others soon.

Dear Editor:

I want to write my appreciation of SCREEN SECRETS Magazine. I think it's a wow, especially those stories of the dream girls of the movie idols by Bob Moak. I like them best of all. I read all the life stories, too. But I wish you would get the life story of Ronald Colman. I am sure all Mr. Colman's fans would like to read about his life, and it has never yet been written. I can hardly wait to read about his dream girl.

Hopefully yours,

F. L.

You and others who liked the "Dream Girl" series will enjoy one of the most pleasing surprises of your lives in a forthcoming issue. Try to guess what it is. It's too good to tell now. You would just die waiting if you knew what it is, so watch SCREEN SECRETS closely.

New York, N. Y.

Dear Editor:

In the September issue of SCREEN SECRETS, I was very pleased to learn a little more about the life and apparent disposition of Mary Brian, which bit of her life story was disclosed in the chapter of her own, Fan Letters Saved Me. A most striking feature was the contrast between other confessions of life in reality, and her's, with the earnest ambition to achieve the highest standards of a world-famous career as an actress.

With reference to the topic on which she wrote, I would like to say that we fans and admirers should continue to give her a big hand. Not that I feel as though her success depends upon complimentary remarks of my own or the likes of me, but for the reason that she so sincerely attributes her success and popularity to the letters of screen fans, why not say that no surer proof of success need be mentioned than that of her personal attractiveness, and the charming manner in which she played the party of Lucy in The River of Romance?

As a booster, I would like to see and hear more about her, and if I'm allowed the privilege to ask a favor of you, I would be delighted to know, if it be practicable and favorable, to procure the address of Miss Brian.

Very respectfully yours,

D. W. H.

As a regular reader of SCREEN SECRETS, you will read about Mary Brian every month. Write to her at Paramount-Famous-Lasky Studio, Hollywood.

Classified Picture Guide

[Other reviews will be found on page 66]

DRAMA

Pleasure Crazed—A society drama that gives the lowdown on the uppercrust against a background of society in Santa Barbara, the playground of the world. Plot introduces crooks, jewel robberies, auto chases, and love. Dorothy Burgess Marguerite Churchill and Rex Bell are the only familiar faces in the cast but the rest are good, and the picture has an air that makes you like it.—Fox.

Woman Trap—Hal Skelly, the famous clown and dancing fool, turns detective for this. He solves the mysterious deaths of his brother and his sweetheart's brother and captures the murderer. It is not a cherry picture, yet it has a certain power. Skelly does well in his rôle, Chester Morris is touching as the younger brother, and Evelyn Brent is sullenly beautiful.—Paramount.

Masquerade—In which a gentleman crook takes advantage of his resemblance to a wealthy clubman to do some dirty work. Of course, the heroine, Leila Hyams, wrongfully accused of being a burgler, exposes the pseudo clubman at the psychological moment. J. Farrell MacDonald is included in the cast which has many strange names.—Fox.

Protection—Robert Elliott distinguishes himself in a rip-snorting story of newspaper life. Racketeers, politicians and newspaper men give each other the run around until the hero, the boy reporter, exposes the crooks and wins the girl. Paul Page and Dorothy Burgess do very well by their rôles.—Fox.

College Days—Another wild college picture wherein everyone raises whoopee throughout a college course, although it is really not so far-fetched as most of this type. Cliff Edwards, while he does seem a bit old for a college youth, does much to help the picture along with his singing and uke playing. Sally Starr and Robert Montgomery are a dashing pair of college youngsters.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

The Great Divide—Dorothy Mackaill is the proud and pampered daughter of wealth, humbled by a he-man of the wide-open spaces. Ian Keith is the hard-boiled lover who kidnaps the heroine and carries her off to his cabin to teach her a few lessons for her own good—and the way he does it has a charm of its own. Yes, they marry, but only after Ian has straightened out several complicated matters caused by Myrna Loy, an exotic Mexican girl.—First National.

The Drake Case—A murder mystery with the late Gladys Brockwell as Lulu Marks, a servant girl, the principal suspect. Mrs. Drake is murdered on the eve of her departure for Europe with her stepdaughter. Although she refuses to talk, Lulu Marks is proven innocent and found to be the mother of the heroine.—Universal.

Twin Beds—A fair comedy concerning people in pajamas who get into the wrong apartments. Patsy Ruth Miller and Jack Mulhall do their best to keep things interesting, but the theme is a bit worn.—First National.

COMEDY-DRAMA

Speedway—William Haines is the hero in a racing classic of the old Wallace Reid type. Light comedy-drama in which William takes the place of an aged friend in a crucial race and, after leaving the rest of the field comfortably behind, lets the friend finish the winning lap. Anita Page is his leadng lady, and a swell team they make for these light-romance pictures.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

One Hysterical Night—Here is Reginald Denny as he used to be in the good old days when his farces had you rolling off chairs. He's a rich young man lured into an insane asylum by relatives who are after his money and who mean to keep him there. Comely Nora Lane is the nurse who wins his name from him and his freedom for him.—Universal.

Why Leave Home—Imagine—three neglected middle-aged mammas who hire three lads to entertain them while their sweet papas are stepping out with three young gals. Then, they all end up at the same road house. Oh, what fun! It's The Cradle Snatchers taken from the stage and put on the screen with dialogue and song. The cast includes Sue Carol, Walter Catlett, Nick Stuart, David Rollins, Richard Keene, Ilka Chase, Laura Hamilton, Dot Farley, Dixie Lee and Jean Bary.

The Very Idea—One of the funniest talkies produced yet. It is taken from the stage success, The First Year, with Frank Craven, the author and star of the stage play, in the leading rôle. He is a nut on eugenics who convinces a couple about to adopt a baby, that they should arrange for a perfect child by picking the parents in advance. Allen Kearns, Doris Eaton, Sally Blane and Hugh Trevor are very entertaining.

Getting Personal

Intimate items of this and that about the stars.

Cecil B. de Mille has approximately 15,000 stills, valued at about $180,000, from 55 productions which he has directed since 1913. They start with The Squaw Man and the last is Dynamite.

Edmund Lowe had the distinction of being the youngest pedagogue in the history of Santa Clara University. He was a member of the faculty at the age of nineteen.

Edna Murphy has dyed her lovely golden hair dark brown, and has cut most of it off, wearing it nowadays in a boyish bob.

Mary Doran, the former Broadway chorus girl, who is making good in pictures, owns one of the largest libraries to be found in any screen player's home.

Robert Armstrong

Robert Armstrong, having bought his mother a home of her own, has now purchased one for three of his aunts, and they have just finished moving in.

Nils Asther's fondest hope is to spend Christmas with his parents in Sweden. It will be his first trip home since coming to America.

Marilyn Miller's favorite color is pink, and at least two-thirds of her clothes are in that shade.

Bill Haines' sisters, Ann and Lillian, wanted to work in pictures just for a day, to see what it was actually like. They suggested it to Bill, but he poohpoohed the idea. Imagine his embarrassment when he came to work one morning to find Ann and Lillian already at work in his very own picture.

Carol Lombard takes her sun bath on the golf course. A small plot of ground near her beach home has been leveled off and here Carol and her friends receive their sun baths while taking exercises on the golf course, followed by a dip in the old Pacific.

While studio officials were debating who should have the leading feminine rôle in Rudy Vallee's picture, The Vagabond Lover, Rudy settled the question by asking for Sally Blane, whom he had met at the studio.

Sally Blane

Nick Stuart is disconsolate! Floods have tied up railroads between here and Arizona, where Sue Carol is on location. And Nick was planning on spending all his spare time commuting between the two points.

Buddy Rogers has invested some of his savings in a blue DuPont town car, with a chauffeur 'neverything.

Harry Gribbon, the comedian, owns a beauty shop on Wilshire Boulevard. He can tell you all there is to know about permanent waves and facials.

Karl Dane owns one, too, but none of his friends will ever be convinced that he patronizes it.

Joan Crawford is not going to let winter force her to wear hose. She is gadding about in a gray lapin coat, barelegged. Lapin is one of the season's newest furs.

Joe Cobb has outgrown his part in Our Gang comedies, so his place has been taken by Norman Chaney.

Mary Brian

Mary Brian has at last had to bob her hair. Her rôle in The Children demanded a bob-haired modern miss, so Mary's locks had to go the way of all flesh.

Monte Blue recently broke four ribs in a fall during the filming of his current picture.

Final Movie Title Story

Below is the final winning movie title in the SCREEN SECRETS movie title contest which ends with this issue. This month's winner, awarded $10.00 for her story, is Miss Eleanor Whitman, Box 417, Patchogue, N. Y.

Man, Woman and Sin

SALLY and Don Juan were Lovers. He knew the only thing for this Coquette was Orchids and Ermine, so he joined The Big Parade to Broadway.

On the Road to Broadway he led A Dog's Life until he met in The Big City, Rough House Rosie whose motto was Get Your Man. Red Hair, Dangerous Curves and Wine made him forget his Voice of Conscience and My Best Girl. Borrowing Skinner's Dress Suit he soon was A Good Fellow to Our Dancing Daughters and the Gold Diggers. Completely Hard Boiled Broadway Nights bored him so he became a member of The Underworld and lived Outside the Law.

He got into Hot Water One Exciting Night when the man in The Brown Derby and Old Clothes trailed him for the murder of The Angel of Broadway. They gave him The Third Degree but he stuck to his Alibi. In a Fury, Detectives put out The Drag Net and got evidence from Ladies of the Mob. For Three Weeks he faced Four Walls before he was placed On Trial. He went Speeding Through the trial in Six Days and was saved from The Noose by The Woman on the Jury.

The Power of the Press made him an Outcast, so he went back to his Fast Life; met a Street Angel and became Slave of Desire. Desire made him The Fool and he headed Hell Bent to where Flesh and the Devil awaited him. With unseeing eyes he plunged into The Dance of Life, Content with The Bright Shawl and Rouged Lips. New Toys are soon broken and he crept Out of the Ruins a different man. Voices of the City called to him, so he went back to The Great White Way in Search of a Thrill. Why Worry if I'm Broadway Broke, he thought, I'll break down The Barrier and get The Crowd to take me back in The Racket. The Unfair Sex will never tempt me again. From now on I'm Womanproof.

The Exiles are always welcomed back, so he became one of Strangers of the Night and acquired The Silent Partner. They called her The Reckless Lady for she was responsible for many a Phantom Bullet and had never yet been Tracked by the Police. Men of Steel had crashed under this female Jesse James, but our hero, tired of Bachelor Brides and Forbidden Hours, went Homeward Bound to try and find Happiness and The Eternal Love.

The Passionate Quest ended when Irresistible Lover found A Lady of Quality who had an Understanding Heart and was waiting To Honor and Obey. After One Hour of Love and Smiles, they planned The Enchanted Cottage in The Beautiful City and maybe—a Sonny Boy.

Later Just Married Twenty-one days he told The Cock-Eyed World—This is Heaven!

Society in Cinemaland

"Wasn't it a lovely wedding?" Ruth was saying.

"Yes, and didn't you feel sorry for Helen Ferguson?" offered Gertrude Olmstead. "She and William Russell were so devoted to each other, and you know this wedding must have touched many tender memories for her, he has been dead so short a while."

The wedding supper was being served, and finally, as all good things must end, the crowd began to leave, Patsy Ruth and Tay slipped away for a two-day honeymoon (both were in the midst of pictures), and Betty and I turned our weary footsteps homeward.

DON'T you just know this is going to be a huge opening? Marion Davies' always are," Betty said to me as we started out to see Marianne.

As we neared the theater, we could see the giant sun-arcs streaming through the skies, and crowds were milling 'round the entire block to catch glimpses of the stars as they entered the building.

"Oh, there's Pauline Starke. just being announced," Betty spoke excitedly.

Just then Ruth Roland, looking almost infantile in a pale blue bouffant frock, came up to us for a few words.

As we started down the aisle, Betty almost stopped in her tracks to exclaim over Irene Bordoni, who looked too lovely, in a white satin dress with ermine wrap. She was, as usual, surrounded by men.

Bebe Daniels was there with Ben Lyon, and she, too, wore white.

The picture was marvelous—but Betty kept turning around to stare at Nils Asther and Vivian Duncan.

"Look, there's Cliff Edwards—that's his wife with him."

"And doesn't Anita Page look too cute for words," Betty continued. "That black and gold dress, and tiny sequin helmet is the most becoming thing I ever saw on her."

At the conclusion of the picture, Marion Davies made a personal appearance. Her dress was a perfect dream, so smart and chic. All gold brocade and black velvet.

I WONDER why they're so late—they must have melted from the heat," said Betty, in a stage whisper, as we sat in All Soul's church. waiting for the strains of Lohengrin to warn us

EARLE LIEDERMAN—The Muscle Builder
Author of "Muscle Building," "Science of Wrestling," "Secrets of Strength," "Here's Health," "Endurance," etc.

HOW STRONG ARE YOU?
Can You Do These Things?

Lift 200 lbs. or more overhead with one arm; bend and break a horseshoe; tear two decks of playing cards; bend spikes; chin yourself with one hand?

CAN you do any of them? I can and many of my pupils can. It is remarkable the things a man really can do if he will make up his mind to be strong. I have taken men who were ridiculed because of their frail make-up and developed them into the strongest men of their locality.

I WANT YOU FOR 90 DAYS

These are the days that call for speed. In olden days it took years to develop a strong, healthy body. I can completely transform you in 90 days. Yes, make a complete change in your entire physical make-up. In 30 days I guarantee to increase your biceps one full inch. I also guarantee to increase your chest two inches. But I don't quit there. I don't stop till you're a finished athlete—a real strong man. I will broaden your shoulders, deepen your chest, strengthen your neck. I will give you the arms and legs of a Hercules. I will put an armor plate of muscle over your entire body. But with it come the strong, powerful lungs which enrich the blood, putting new life into your entire being. You will be bubbling over with strength, pep and vitality.

A DOCTOR WHO TAKES HIS OWN MEDICINE

Many say that any form of exercise is good, but this is not true. I have seen men working in the factories and mills who literally killed themselves with exercise. They ruined their hearts or other vital organs, ruptured themselves or killed off what little vitality they possessed.

I was a frail weakling myself in search of health and strength. I spent years in study and research, analyzing my own defects to find what I needed. After many tests and experiments, I discovered a secret of progressive exercising. I increased by own arms over six and a half inches, my neck three inches, and other parts of my body in proportion. I decided to become a public benefactor and impart this knowledge to others. Physicians and the highest authorities on physical culture have tested my system and pronounced it to be the surest means of acquiring perfect manhood. Do you crave a strong, well-proportioned body and the abundance of health that goes with it? Are you true to yourself? If so, spend a pleasant half-hour in learning how to attain it. The knowledge is yours for the asking.

that Mary Eaton and Millard Webb were coming down the aisle.

Betty craned her neck, whispering: "There's Kathlyn Williams—and doesn't she look too sweet in that cream-lace dress, with the green coat and huge picture hat to match."

Ann Pennington, Micky Neilan and Pauline Garon sat down in front of us. Ann looked adorable, just like a tiny girl, in her orchid coat and hat.

There were lovely pink carnations at the end of each pew; the altar was banked in palms and pink roses, the roses being attached to gigantic shepherds' crooks, which gave a most picturesque effect.

Even the dignity of the wedding procession could not quell the loquacious Betty. "Mary surely is a brave girl," she murmured, "to have beautiful Marilyn Miller for her maid of honor." And Marilyn really did look charming in her flesh-colored chiffon, with draperies floating as she walked.

From the church we dashed out to the Beverly-Wilshire hotel, where the reception was to be held.

The first person we met as we entered the room was Pauline Starke, and we went over to talk to her.

"Who is that pretty little girl in pink?" Betty nudged me. "Charles Eaton has been very devoted to her all day."

No one seemed to know just then, but later we found out that her name is Florence Allen, and that she has recently come out from the New York stage.

"Oh, and there's Laura La Plante with brown hair! It's very becoming, though it's hard to get used to our blonde-headed Laura as a brunette."

While Russell Ball was getting his lights ready for the pictures, we went into the ladies' dressing room, and who should come in but Mary herself. Not to be restrained, Betty dashed breathlessly up to Mary.

"What have you got on that's borrowed?" she asked.

"Well, I'll show you," Mary replied. "According to the best wedding tradition, here's the something old—lace hose that are over fifteen years old. They aren't very pretty, but I'm wearing them because they have been in the family so long." With that she showed us several runs down the back of them. "Something new is my dress. Something borrowed—well, maybe I hadn't better show you just what I have on that fits that condition—but I have them on. Something blue—" Here, Mary lifted her skirts and showed us at least seven pairs of garters, one of which was blue. All her friends had asked her to wear their garters for luck, so Mary would be obliging.

After the pictures were made, everyone ate some of the delicious buffet supper provided. Then we headed for the beach, to have dinner with Mr. and Mrs. J. Ward Cohen.

WE WERE on our way to Beverly Hills, to the post-wedding shower Virginia Zanuck, Helen Ferguson and Lila Lee were having for Patsy Ruth Miller Garnett.

Helen met us at the door and took our wraps. "Isn't it too bad we couldn't have this before the wedding," were her first words to us. "But, you know Pat had to move up the date of the wedding because her brother was summoned back to college earlier than he had expected, and, of course, she wanted him to be in the party."

A bunch of girls were scattered about the room, on chairs, and some kid fashion, on the floor. Lilyan Tashman was the center of a group, and Betty made straight for that corner, knowing she would hear lots of interesting news there.

Lilyan looked stunning, as usual, in a gold brocade and brown satin afternoon dress, with a brown velvet hat that was a cross between a turban and a tam-o shanter.

Patsy was sitting on the floor, new trousseau dress and all—and the skirt of it was tiny accordion pleats. "Doesn't Pat look marvelous in that dark green?" Ethel Shannon Jackson asked the world-at-large.

Betty pulled me over to where Lila Lee was telling about Pat's departure on her wedding journey.

"As they drove off," she was saying, "we looked 'round us for some rice and old shoes, but nobody had brought any. So, on the spur of the moment, we took off our own shoes and threw them at Pat and Tay. Luckily, practical Patsy threw them back at us, or we'd have had to go home barefoot."

Who is that stunning brunette just coming in?" Betty was all a-gog. "No, it can't be—yes, it is Edna Murphy! Why, she's cut off most of her lovely hair and dyed what's left of it. She doesn't look like the same person."

Virginia and Helen began leading us out to the garden, where bridge tables were clustered around the most enormous hamper you have ever seen. On it were huge bows of green satin, and it was stacked to overflowing with packages.

There were presents of every description: Gowns, step-ins, hose, towels, books, cocktail napkins, and one of the most unusual offerings was a set of silk-covered hangers with shoe trees to match in little heart-shapes. They were the original thought of Mrs. Lloyd Hughes (Gloria Hope), and caused quite a furore.

Just as the last present was opened, and Pat melodramatically said, "Is that all?" Laura La Plante arrived on the scene and contributed her bit.

The Silent Voice

"No-o-o. No, of course, you always look perfect— but that amber gown!"

"Ouch!" cried Betsy. "And that from a cynical bachelor! You'll do," she assured him. "You're not so bachelorish any more."

"How can I be?" he inquired, bringing Betsy a chair. "Our adopted daughter was just in."

"Did you tell her about the write-up?"

"Oh, no—nothing except that she might get a break. Have you heard from the editor of Film Foibles?"

BETSY nodded as she lazily rearranged a lock of her exquisite red hair. "'Hell', he writes, 'will pop; but hell-popping is nothing to what I would go through for you, my green-eyed tanager!' How do you like that, Meester Denton?"

"If he comes out here," Denton explained, meaningly, "he'll get all the hell-popping he wants—what was he doing, proposing or accepting an article?"

"Bark for me, darling—no, it was just an acceptance." And assuming a business-like demeanor, she inquired whether or not, at the première, he was to act in the capacity of end man.

"Oh, yes," Denton assented wearily. "I've been chosen as master of ceremonies.

Suddenly he leaned over and kissed her full on the lips; and even if Betsy had cared to ask him his plans, she would have found it quite impossible.

THE première of The Flying Blonde, at Grauman's Chinese Theater, was all that any producer could have wished.

The outside of the theater was brilliantly illuminated by huge arc lights which pierced the astounded Heavens with shafts of milky-whiteness, while high up on the parapets, overlooking the patio-like court yard, two fierce Mongol warriors paraded in theatrical loneliness. Even the slight rain failed to quell the enthusiasm of the eager-eyed crowd that jammed the sidewalks for blocks around.

Cheers and clapping followed Wanda as Barry laughingly helped her through the crowd—now surging over the ropes —to the microphone. After a cheery word to the expectant radio world, they entered the theater which was littered with gorgeous stars, exquisitely scented and gowned — actors, oozing with personality plus, and directors, so tired and wan—a whole bevy of Wampas Babies were ogling avidly about, ascertaining, perhaps, if anyone had missed them—newspaper writers, débutantes and society dowagers. And there was even a sprinkling of extras who had starved for three months in order to be seen at an opening.

MERNA, who was quietly sitting beside Abe Zarto, attempting to appear contented, joined in the ripple of applause that broke over the house as Wanda Wiley undulated down the aisle.

The lights were finally dimmed. The prologue was on. And after what seemed an eternity, but in reality was a little over two hours, The Flying Blonde was announced, starring Wanda Wiley, "The Blonde Menace".

"Wanda's" cabaret scene was greeted with gasps of delight; but this was nothing to the pregnant silence that followed "Wanda's" rendition of The Golden Girl as she sang a sad farewell to her lover, her lover who was flying away toward the east, in the Waco.

At the end of the picture, Wanda—resplendently gowned in virtuous white satin—was led out onto the stage by Denton. Her blond hair scintillated like powdered silver, and her gown sparkled with diamonds. Denton praised her, unstintedly, declaring that if it hadn't been for her golden voice, the picture undoubtedly would have been relegated to the shelf of mediocrity. "Indeed," he exclaimed, "I think it quite proper that Miss Wiley no longer be known as The Blonde Menace, but rather as The Golden Menace...the girl with the voice supreme—"

Merna was stupified by Denton's apparent treachery; and as she gazed incredulously at the stage, Wanda and Denton seemed to converge into one ball of hot, dancing light, and ribald voices were laughing and murmuring inside of her bewildered mind: "All due to Wanda's golden voice...Wanda's effort . . . The girl with the voice supreme...Wanda...Wanda..."

"What're you laughing at?" Zarto demanded in a hoarse whisper.

I'M NOT laughing," said Merna, only mildly astonished to discover that she was, indeed, shaking from the tip of her toes to her head. "I'm not laughing at anything...They're applauding ...they're applauding. Abe, don't you hear them?"

"Sure I do," he admitted with a peculiar smile. Then Zarto riveted his eyes on Wanda's satin-sheathed body as though he were allowing his memory to drop back to the days of yore—of about six months ago, to be exact.

Wanda was so pleasantly surprised, not to say dumbfounded, by Denton's flattery that she found it difficult to deliver even the usual stereotyped speech of gratitude...while Merna shakily pushed a tear from her eye and felt cold and miserable and all alone.

It was just as Zarto was assisting Merna into his limousine that Barry and Wanda hurried past. Wanda was smiling triumphantly, but when she caught the steady, unwavering accusation in Merna's hurt, brown eyes, she flushed, became confused and impatiently urged Barry to hurry.

"MY DEAR Wanda," Barry was saying, "it's certainly funny that I never realized it before, but your voice is absolutely divine! I...I can't quite tell you how it affected..." But they were out of hearing now, and Merna had stepped into the car, uttering a cold laugh that entrapped a heart-breaking cry.

Zarto was the first to break the silence as his limousine purred softly through the rain.

"Listen, Babe, it's you that should be The Golden Menace. You know that, Babe? It's a damned shame, but what happens, happens, and nobody can change it."

Merna felt so utterly forgotten, and small, and chilly that she really was too weak to remonstrate when Zarto placed a consoling arm about her shoulder. It was sort of nice to be comforted in such a blue hour, even though she felt that his words were quite unaccompanied by honest affection.

"You gotta sing The Golden Girl song," he rambled along, "sing it tonight at The Sow's Ear. It drove 'em nuts at the show. First you'll sing it with your revue, real peppy and full of sex appeal, and then for the encore, you'll come back by yourself in the spot and sing it as if your lover had given you the gate, understand? Just like you did in the picture."

"BUT I can't," Merna protested weakly, from the darkness of the car. "Sol would fire me, sure, or worse than that, lay me off at thirty-five a week. I need the money. I'm awful sorry, Abe, but I can't risk it."

"Listen to me. Babe. Ain't I Sol's friend? He don't care what I do. You can sing that song. I'm telling you and that's all that's necessary.

Deciding that she didn't care much what happened any more, Merna agreed to sing the song for him.

As she came out for her encore of The Golden Girl, she slowly approached the tables crowded with dim shadows. She was partially blinded by the spotlight as she finished her song with a low, clear, poignant note. The lights flashed on, only to find her staring with yearning eyes at Barry Rowe. Barry was amazed, and as Merna hastily left the room, he was still blinking as one in a daze. Could it be possible that it had been Merna's voice, instead of Wanda's, that had so entranced him? Surely this song as sung by Merna was identical with the one in The Flying Blonde!

Suddenly he turned back to Wanda, who was savagely jabbing out her cigarette on a saucer.

"That little quicky-bait'll pay for this," she was muttering.

"Pay for it," Barry repeated. "What do you mean?"

WANDA was coldly furious. Fornately, the orchestra drowned out the titters of the few people who knew of the deception.

"For tryin' to copy my stuff. D'you suggest that I trot over and kiss her?"

"Oh...Oh, she copied your song, eh?"

"Well, what d'you think she did—composed it on the spot?"

"No. No." And Barry seemed extremely grave. "I didn't think much of anything, I guess. Might not have done any harm to . . . say, excuse me just a moment, will you, Wanda?" Barry rose from his chair and gazed down at his enraged companion. "Be right back. Order frog legs for me." And with that, he was gone.

Merna was sitting on her dressing-room couch in a dejected bundle as Zarto quietly entered, closing the door behind him.

"You looped 'em, Babe!"

And although Zarto was a man famous for his ability to carry liquor, Merna noticed a slight weave in his walk. She hurriedly jumped to her feet and backed up a step. Zarto advanced and without formality drew her into his arms.

"Oh, please, Abe. Not now. I'm so tired...so very tired."

LISTEN, Babe, now don't keep stringin' your Uncle Abe! I love you an' want you. Who else can do for you what I have? Huh? Answer that..."

But before Merna could have possibly answered, Zarto had crushed her lips with his.

"Let go of me, Abe! Let go!" Struggling fiercely, she scraped three red lines across his cheek and uttered a terrified scream.

"You damned devil!" Zarto cried. "If you think you can play me for a fool, you're crazier than—"

He lunged at her. The door swung open, accompanied by a burst of loud music. The door slammed shut, and Barry had his back against it.

"Get out of here, you yellow aviator!" Zarto commanded, in a low, shaking voice; his eyes narrowed to subtle pools of insidious danger.

"Will you come with me, Merna?" Barry inquired.

Merna stared wildly from one to the other, and before she could answer, Zarto again commanded Barry to get out.

Barry suddenly whirled on him.

"Just what are you doing in here, yourself, Zarto?"

Zarto emitted a harsh laugh. "What d'you think?"

"You're a liar!" Barry shouted.

MERNA gave a frightened little cry as Zarto's hand flew to his hip pocket and whipped out an automatic. Barry leaped and caught Zarto's wrist as the gun exploded, crashing a solid fist into his chin. Zarto fell into the corner. Blood trickled from his mouth.

Barry's fine, tanned features were distorted with rage, insane jealousy and love. "Come along, Merna," he ordered. "You're going with me!"

Merna was unable to speak as she glanced, horrified, from Zarto's bleeding mouth and half-opened eyes to Barry's twisted face, and the white skin of her throat throbbed jerkily. This had all happened so suddenly that she couldn't quite catch up. On one side, was her love for Barry and also her uncertainty in his love—and on the other, her reliance on Zarto's weekly pay check.

"Oh, dear God!" she cried, as she sank to the couch, hiding her tortured eyes in her hands.

"You better get out," Zarto was mumbling from the corner. "Can't you see she don't want you?"

LOSING what little self-control had been left him, Barry demanded: "What's the matter? Is it true that you're Abe Zarto's girl? Is that the reason you're hiding your face?" And no sooner were the words out of his mouth than Barry would have given all he owned to recall them.

A grin stretched the corners of Zarto's bloody mouth as Merna jumped to her feet in a rage. She confronted Barry with all the primitive, intense hatred of a young savage. The room seemed to quiver with silence—except for the dull throb of the orchestra—as Merna's brown eyes shot sparks of wrath at the man she loved—who had returned her love by outraging her womanhood. Her little heart beat to her temples with the rhythmatic roar of the Waco's motor, as she cried in a choked, tortured voice: "Get out! . . . You . . . get . . . out!"

Barry's pleading eyes fell before the unwavering hate in Merna's. He tried to explain away this boorish, inexcusable insult, but his lips faltered. He bowed; and with a broken gasp, turned on his heel. The music crashed into the room. In barely a second it fell off to a dim, pulsating rumble, and Merna sank to her couch, alone with Zarto.

[To be concluded]

Will Abe Zarto finally achieve his nefarious ends or will Barry Rowe win the girl of his heart? What part will Rogers Denton and Betsy Manners play in the smashing denouement to this thrilling story of adventure in the skies, and love and intrigue and treachery in a talkie-mad Hollywood? Don't miss the cyclonic conclusion to this gripping narrative, in the January issue of

"Must have had a Big Raise, eh, Bill?"

NO WONDER ED, the Receiving Teller down at the National Bank, was curious. This was the fifth Monday in succession I had made a big EXTRA deposit. By "big" I mean $20 to $25 more than I usually banked each week.

He wondered where I was getting all the Extra Money

"You bet I had a big raise," I answered. "In fact I gave myself one! I'm a professional TENOR BANJOIST three nights a week—playing in Harry Smith's Dance Orchestra, at $10 a night!" "You, a paid musician!" exclaimed Ed. "Why, I didn't know you ever touched a string!"

Six Months ago I was Lonely—Six Months ago I was Poor!

"Well," I said, "one night I was sitting at home feeling lonely and blue—wishing for more good times and more money to spend. Picking up a magazine I just happened upon an ad about a new way of learning the TENOR BANJO at home. It said anyone could learn to play. I had no idea I could—always thought those things were just for a few 'talented' folks. But I said to myself, 'I'll send for their Free Book, anyway.' Guess you can tell from my face and my tank book that I'm mighty glad I did, Ed! That Course sure taught me quick. Then Harry Smith heard me play one night and offered me a spare-time job with his Orchestra. And he'll soon be able to use me steady, six nights a week—at $70 a week. I can't really call playing the TENOR BANJO 'work.' It's FUN!—every minute of it. And it's better than having a rich uncle."

The Same Opportunity is yours—Right Now!

Never mind if you've never played a note in your life. This new method can make you a popular, high-paid Tenor Banjoist in a few short weeks. The Coupon below brings your Free copy of my book. It tells how thousands of others have succeeded—and how YOU can!

"I Want a Lover!"

WHY, you lose all spontaneity. You recite by rote. In silent pictures, an actress had some leeway. It was herself she was expressing, her own interpretation of the character she was portraying. And that is the most that an actress can hope for—to express herself.

"I am me—I love me. Other people may hate me, may not like the way I act, the way I do things, but I do. And so does everybody else love the me that he is. Don't ever let anyone tell you differently. It's just human nature to love the me down beneath all the outside covering."

This, coming from the average person, would have sounded like the utmost in conceit, but Mary is no average sort. She has an amazing clarity of vision and intrinsic honesty. She has learned many lessons from life—one of which is never to delude herself.

Remembering that I was talking to the girl whose name had been blazoned across the front pages of papers over two continents as "the hard-knock girl of the theatrical industry because she was too beautiful," I asked: "Tell me, Miss Nolan, has your beauty been a hindrance to your career and a curse on your life?"

"I'm not beautiful, in the first place," she started off. "I have just a "photographic face.' But, even if I did have this quality of beauty that we hear so much about, it could never be blamed for any tough breaks I have ever had. Whatever looks I may possess, have been the biggest help in the world to me, and let me tell you now, it's the same with every woman. Looks never held anybody back—they are always an asset—and any girl that tells you differently is mistaken.

MARY really is beautiful, though. She is tall, and orders pie loaded with whipped cream for dessert, while all the rest of Hollywood is dieting, which describes her figure—oh, so slim and willowy. Her hair is Hollywood-blonde, which means that its natural golden sheen has been supplanted by the white henna demanded for perfect photography. Her eyes are deep blue, with lashes—so long!

It didn't seem possible that such a delectable person should have shut love out of her life except during business hours.

"Do you think all your pleasure must come from your work? What about love, not a lover; has it no place in your life?" I asked her.

"I know very little about love," she replied. "I have been in love only once."

"You are very fortunate to have had even one great love affair in your life, Miss Nolan. Many people go through life without even one true love. You, in feeling the emotion of real love, have something that no one can take away from you."

"Except the person you feel that love for," she answered quietly.

"Tell me, do you like the men in Hollywood?" I thought maybe I could discover the possibility of any imminent new romance in her life.

She pondered the question a moment. Then, with a humorous expression:

"Men? I never think of persons as men and women. They are just people. There is no difference.

I LIKE to have men around me, yes. But I also like women friends—though I haven't had so many. But the only time I will admit a difference in feeling toward men and women is in my work, and in that way, men in Hollywood are the same as elsewhere.

"I made a picture with Jack Gilbert. He is wonderful to work with. He gives you everything he has, he spends himself in helping you give to your characterization the very best that you have.

"I am sentimental—when Jack and I were on the same picture he used to sing to me. After work, when the still desert night was calm around us, Jack used to put his arms about me and sing to me. Memory Lane was our favorite song, but we had another name for it.

"But sometimes I get tired of all people—of luxury and formality. I say to my maid and chauffeur: 'I think I'll run away and be a Gypsy.' But I realize that I can never leave it all, I can never go back out of the glitter and glamour of my present life.

"I used to be adaptable—but not any more. I have become too used to having things done for me, to having ease and comfort, ever to be able to do without. But, understand, I am never for one moment unaware of the shallowness and futility of these same material things."

"I know that this unsatiated hunger of soul will continue, maybe all my life, until I accomplish a piece of work that satisfies me; and to do that, as I told you before, I must have a lover!"

To Please Everybody

REGINALD DENNY made his final Universal comedy, No, No, Napoleon, in two languages—American and English.

The story is laid in an insane asylum, and a slang expression such as "a nut factory" must be changed to "a mad house" to get over in England.

Throughout, the dialogue of the original version is in typical American slang which has an entirely different meaning in Great Britain. So two recordings were made of the majority of the scenes.

Oracle of the Mike

almost double that which she had received in silent pictures, and immediately began work on her first talking-singing-dancing production, A Most Immoral Lady.

Conrad Nagel had been a leading man for years, but demands for his services were growing fewer—faces "wore out" in those days of silent pictures. However, Warner Brothers were sure of Conrad's voice, for they had heard him as Hollywood's best known master of ceremonies. So he found plenty of starring rôles with Warner Brothers, and it was only because he could not work in more than two pictures at a time, that his name was eliminated from more of their early talkies. Then Fox and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sought him, developing a three-cornered battle for his services.

THE story of John Boles is not unlike that of Nagel. Great ballyhoo heralded his coming from the New York stage to be Gloria Swanson's leading man in Loves of Sunya. He worked in that one picture, and then it was only occasionally that one heard his name. But when it came time to make The Desert Song, someone remembered that he had a singing voice back in his footlight days. He was selected for the leading male rôle, and it made him one of the most popular leading men in cinemaland.

Like Leatrice Joy, Bessie Love went in for personal appearance when it seemed that no studio wanted her services any more. She headed a revue, played her uke, sang and danced. When Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer decided to enter the musical picture field with The Broadway Melody, there was much consternation over the matter of a leading lady when one executive, who had seen Bessie on the stage, had an idea.

"Why not give the public an old favorite—one that we are sure of as to camera ability, voice and dancing feet?" he asked his confreres.

Then he suggested Bessie, and she was signed for this picture. But she hadn't worked a week before they tendered her a five-year contract at a salary larger than she had ever thought possible for herself.

Betty Compson came from Poverty Row, where she had been making quickies, to take part in Weary River, which was to be a silent picture. However, First National added dialogue, and, lo and behold! the mike discovered that Betty had a perfect voice, both for speaking and singing. Then Betty staged the most sensational comeback in the history of the cinema. Today, she is turning down more offers of featured rôles than she is able to accept.

NO ONE ever looked upon Norma Shearer in the silent days as a great actress. That is, not until the coming of the talkies and the mike uncovered the fact that she had a voice, plus great dramatic ability.

Hollywood even smiled when Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer cast her in the title rôle of The Trial of Mary Dugan. But the result was a new Norma Shearer. Talents, long held in check by the limitations of the silent drama, were given an opportunity to parade themselves. The Norma Shearer of today is no more like the Norma Shearer who was, than gold is like brass.

The same might be said of Marion Davies, whose first talkie, Marianne, has just been released. The world has forgotten that Marion had been in musical comedy before she came to the movies, but the mike rediscovered the fact that she could sing and dance and had inimitable powers of mimicry.

There are scores and scores of others whose climbing days were over, but who had hidden talents that the microphone has brought forward and caused them once more to shoot to the top of the ladder of fame.

Consider Ramon Novarro, who, since his early youth, has been training his voice for opera. Then Polly Moran, long popular as a screen comédienne, but whose voice was proved by the microphone to be even funnier than her face. Alice White is another whose popularity was on the wane when talkies arrived. Now she is so strong at the box-office that First National has signed her to a new contract at an increased salary, with an expensive roadster as a bonus for having affixed her signature. Then there's . . . well, why go on? It would take hundreds of pages to relate all the astonishing discoveries of golden voices after the Oracle, Dolores, gave out the hot tip through the medium of a phonographic disc.

BUT to go back to this lass from the land south of the Rio Grande—the first of the screen's talking-singing stars.

They didn't take a chance on her accent in the filming of Evangeline, her most recent picture, so they eliminated the dialogue and let her sing, instead. Now they intend to give Dolores a story for her next picture that will be the type in which she can score with her accent.

Meanwhile, the record she made on Ramona continues to contribute to her upkeep. The royalties on its sale bring her a monthly check of considerable size.

So, Dolores may go down in cinema history as the Oracle of the mike—the first screen star with confidence enough in her voice to imperil her screen future by talking or singing for her public.

Let SCREEN SECRETS be your guide in your quest for authoritative information about your favorite film folk.

If You Look Like Marian

tall ones. Miss Nixon's picture wardrobe for the present year will cost the studio about $14,000 and this amount does not include the salaries of the expert designers whose originalities make them worth that much more annually to the studio.

Softness is the keynote of Miss Nixon's clothes. Her evening gowns are alluring masses of frills and fluffs. She wore for me the particular gown she likes best. It is a peach-colored affair with baby pink ribbons. The bodice is tight and is made of satin. The skirt of georgette and ribbon is full and features a cascade of flounces. A fluffy roll covers the shoulders and a large bow over the heart adds to its attractiveness. Evening gowns with tight bodice and full skirts look well on small girls, Miss Nixon says.

Another type of garment she wears is the coat suit. One that she particularly likes is of dark blue serge. The coat is loose; the skirt is tight and ends just below the knees. A lace collar and cuffs add just the correct soft touch.

SHE wears small hats only. She warns a girl of five feet and one inch or less to refrain from wearing large or bulky hats. "They make her look top-heavy," Marian points out.

Miss Nixon's favorite colors are dark blue, brown, gray, tan and dark green for day wear; peach, orchid, silver white and faint shades of other colors for evening.

She delights in vari-colored outfits such as the sport costume she wore the afternoon I last talked with her. The pleated skirt was tan. The shirt waist was white. She wore a vivid red tie and a scarf of red, white and blue. A blue turban completed the ensemble. Later, she donned a tan sweater with narrow, horizontal stripes of deeper tan. It was made of silk.

Miss Nixon does not care for heavy jewelry and thinks it unbecoming to small girls. A wrist watch, a light necklace and a ring on each hand is the usual extent of her jewels. Of course, since a few months ago a wedding ring has been added. Occasionally she wears earrings.

Girls who look like Miss Nixon, may also wish to act like her. Marian is very quiet. Her voice is soft and musical. When she laughs, you hear a silvery tinkle that you mentally hope will continue for a long time. She is witty and loves to joke. If she has a temper, I have never seen nor heard of it.

SHE uses her hands effectively when she talks, slight movements illustrating her words. This is a habit, I have noted, that most motion picture stars have acquired.

She looks directly at people with whom she is conversing. She has a lingering smile; I mean, one that does not leave her face as if in a hurry to make way for a frown. She has lovely teeth that break into view often, thanks to her ability to laugh.

There you are—that is how Marian Nixon looks, acts and dresses. If you are fortunate enough to be one of those who resemble her, then I advise that you also pattern your actions after her.

Then you will be, oh, so popular!

Joe Brown acts the part of the familiar night club clown who likes to be the life of the party. In this scene from the First National-Vitaphone picture, "Sally", he is attempting to lead a chorus of lovely ladies, much to the official indignation of Ford Sterling.

How to Keep From Growing Old in the Movies

Suggested, but not practiced, by Eddie Quillan, Pathé comedian.

Cough during the filming of a talkie scene.

Then paraphrase loudly: "I'm the cough in your screamie."

* * *

Ask the head electrician if a "juicer" and "grip" is a studio bootlegger and his valise.

Or ask the second assistant director where the first yes-man is.

Say "No!" to the director.

Or refrain from laughing at one of his comedy gags.

Hobnobbing With the Film Folk

Buster Keaton's Back-Fire

IT'S a ticklish business for a star to sit in the audience and listen to comments of people around him. Buster Keaton got an awful ear-full the other night.

It was at the opening of a picture in which he was starred, with other actors, including Johnny Mack Brown, supporting.

Two women beside him, unaware of his identity, kept panning everybody of the cast who was introduced on the stage. Finally it came Buster's turn to go on the stage.

With that dead pan of his still unsmiling and unexpressive, Buster exclaimed, as he rose to go up to the platform: "If you think the other actors were dumb, wait until you hear me!"

Wally MacDonald's Wisecracks

CHATTING about talking pictures the other day, Wally MacDonald said that his idea of the height of disappointment was for an actor to be cast in a talking picture and then find out that he played a deaf mute!

Lon Chaney Wanted Money

NO WONDER Universal isn't putting sound sequences into certain scenes of its new version of The Phantom of the Opera. Lon Chaney wanted no less than $75,000 to appear in a few scenes! Other of the original players appear in scenes in which there is dialogue, but Lon is always silent.

Not only that, but if any other player appeared in his rôle, Lon also wanted $75,000, he having, under his contract, some mysterious right to demand this, it seems.

It is not really greed on Chaney's part, however—this demand for big money. He doesn't wish to speak on the screen, since he feels that his personal identity is best maintained through silent acting. Like Charles Chaplin, he doesn't deem dialogue necessary to expression.

Dix's Latest Romance

THAT dashing young actor, Richard Dix, naturally breathes the air of romance at every turn. Fascinating, genuine, impulsive and generous, almost every girl he meets falls in love with him. No doubt some day Richard will settle down and get married, but in the meantime he courts romance.

Just like a swash-buckling love affair of long ago was Dicky's recent clever ruse to meet a girl he admired but did not know.

He had seen the young lady at a distance. He thought she would be a good screen type. And he wanted to know her. So he arranged an innocent little scheme whereby the young lady would be called up by a photographer friend of his who knew the girl, to invite her to have her picture taken. Then Dickie was to drop in just as she was being photographed.

It all worked out nicely, and so Richard met the charming girl he admired, who turned out to be a young lady of fine family. And the pair are now great friends, with the girl's family thinking Richard is great.

I don't know whether the girl knows about the ruse or not, but nearly any girl would be flattered to have Richard Dix take all that trouble for her.

Corinne Griffith in Tights

FOR the very first time in her life, Corinne Griffith is wearing tights. And does she look well in them? Don't ask silly questions!

It is in Lilies of the Field that Miss Griffith dons the fleshlings, as ladies of the ensemble used to call them.

She also dances in the picture—for the first time professionally, although she has won many dancing cups at the Ambassador and Montmartre in Hollywood.

Mary Pickford's Protege

MARY Pickford does genuinely adore babies, even if she has none of her own. Johnny Mack Brown's first-born is just at present the subject of her particular interest. Johnny played opposite Mary, you remember, in Coquette.

On the day of the christening, Mary called on the Brown family and bestowed a beautiful pearl on the child as a christening gift. The card on the gift read, "From Mary Pickford to Little Coquette Mack Brown."

Every year Mary plans to place a new pearl on the necklace.

The little one is christened Jane Harriet.

Neil Hamilton's Rescue

NEIL Hamilton is an inveterate yachtsman, also a member of the American Magicians' Society. The other night the two fads blended strangely.

Mrs. Hamilton told me, as we were chatting over at Wesley Ruggles' beach house, how one morning Neil and a friend went out in Neil's motor boat. She expected him home, but he didn't return. It grew late. Finally wifey could bear it no longer and she telephoned a woman friend saying she just had to go down to San Pedro harbor and try to find her husband.

The two women went forth in a water taxi. They taxied hither and yon. Finally they came across Neil's motor boat. It was becalmed. But did Neil care? He did not—wasn't worrying a bit. He was in the midst of figuring out a new magician's trick.

"And he almost couldn't be annoyed with being rescued," said his wife.

Bernice Claire listens to her own voice in the rushes of "No, No, Nanette," in which she sings the title role. You may see and talk with Bernice and other famous movie people, if you are the lucky winner in SCREEN SECRETS' great contest.

Talkie Talk

the film, he stated that he had been able, through the medium of dialogue and attendant sounds alone, to follow perfectly the trend of the picture. He further stated that he believes the talking pictures should be rated with the Braille system of reading and radio as inventions which have done most for the amusement of the blind.

The slam of a closing door, the crackling of a newspaper in the hands of a player, the tinkle of a glass thrown to the floor—these were the sounds, as well as the dialogue between players, that brought the action across to the blind man.

New Talkie Idea

WE HAVE grown sort of used to the talking screen, but now they confront us with the talking signboard!

RKO has rigged up such a device to spread the fame of Street Girl, which was recently released.

The talking sign, located in Hollywood, at Sunset and Vine, attracted wide attention from motorists and pedestrians.

Shooting Without Cameras!

A VITAPHONE sequence entirely in the dark—hence making cameras unnecessary—that is the innovation of George Fitzmaurice in filming Tiger Rose at the Warner Brothers Studio!

The scene was shot with no cameras and three microphones and only ordinary work lights were used so Fitzmaurice could see the actors. The "action" took place in the bedroom of Lupe Velez, just after she had blown out the lamp. The scene was "filmed" entirely in the dark! Only the mikes told the story.

A German Oddity

CAN you imagine Ben Lyon, William Collier, Jr., Edna Murphy and Winifred Westover (formerly Mrs. William S. Hart) speaking German? As a matter of fact, they can't speak it, but for all that, they will!

If you went to Germany to see the première of Lummox, Fannie Hurst's famous story, you would hear them all talking the language like residents of Heidelberg.

Fred Zelnik, German stage and screen director, is the man responsible for the odd stunt. He gathered together some German players and rehearsed them to speak the lines in the talkie. He then ran a silent version of the film and as the lips of the American players moved, the German players would speak lines in German. The result is said to be perfect, with the German words fitting correctly on the lips of each American player.

"Now, listen here, Loretta, no speeding!" says Loretta Young, the cop, to Loretta Young, the actress. And the last mentioned Loretta promises not to let her foot get too heavy on the gas pedal. Nevertheless, the only speeding Loretta is doing these days is speeding to fame in filmdom. One of her latest achievements is her performance in "Fast Life"—a very appropriate title, isn't it?

Another Director Takes the Air

CLARENCE BROWN, the director, travels 100 miles daily for his luncheon, yet he is absent from the studio only one and one-half hours.

His plane is housed within half a mile of the M-G-M lot. He motors over at twelve o'clock, then flies to the Nordican Country Club, fifty miles away. He is back on the job at one-thirty.

Brown was one of Uncle Sam's army flying instructors during the war.

Lost By a Whisker

RICHARD ARLEN and his wife, Jobyna Ralston, recently gave a dinner party for which Charlie Farrell, although not included among the guests, supplied both food and amusement.

A few days before, Charlie, who lives but a block away, had acquired a new Jap houseman and a valuable police pup at the same time.

The dog ran away—ran over to call on Dick and Jobyna. Dick, not knowing to whom it belonged, locked it in his kennel.

Next morning the newspapers revealed that Charlie had lost a canine answering the description of the one caged at the Arlen residence. He offered fifty dollars for its return

Dick waited until he saw Charlie drive off for the studio. Clad in overalls and wearing false whiskers, he led the pup back to the Farrell manor and accepted the reward from the Jap.

Twenty-four hours later Charlie's dog was back at the Arlens. Once more Dick led it back to Farrell's. Charlie and the Jap were on the lawn.

Farrell thanked Arlen profusely for its return. In fact everything was wonderful until the Jap spoke up.

"Say, Mister, where's your whiskers?" demanded the Oriental of Dick. Then he told Charlie that there stood the man who had collected the reward.

The fifty dollars paid for the dinner party.

What Next?

IS HOLLYWOOD going domestic with the arrival of Broadwayites for these talkies?

Elliott Nugent, married four years with a wife and two children; Chester Morris, of Alibi fame, married two years, with a son; Raymond Hackett, of Madame X and The Trial of Mary Dugan, married four years, with a baby daughter; Ann Harding and Harry Bannister with their baby boy.

All have taken houses—large ones—not for entertaining but home life purposes.

We wonder what these examples will do for Sue Carol and Nick Stuart, Lupe Velez and Gary Cooper, Nancy Drexel and David Rollins and other Hollywood couples who have been advised not to marry for professional reasons.

Singing Through Life With Maurice

tour the provinces. Much as he hated to leave Paris, his responsibilities would not allow him to pass up an opportunity for an assured income, so he accepted.

THE low comedy character of the peasant in the red cap, which he worked up on the shabby theater of the Menilmontant, proved an overwhelming hit in the provinces. His fame travelled before him. Everywhere he went, he found packed houses awaiting him. It was his first taste of real success and he revelled in it. Furthermore, he was saving money and sending it home to his mother. His brothers and sisters were well clothed and in school. Life did not look as dark as it had a few years ago to the unhappy boy with the singing heart who seemed doomed to work his life away at an uncongenial trade.

All the time that he was travelling through the country, he was carefully studying the effect of his act upon his audiences. He changed his lines and his songs and developed little tricks. But the essentials of his character, the big pantaloons, the cap tilted low on his forehead, the grotesque red nose, the whitened eyelids, he kept the same. He was sure these were what people wanted, what they expected of him.

It was not the sort of character he wanted to make permanently his, but people liked it, and it would serve until he worked out a better one.

After many months of travel throughout all of France, he returned to his native Paris. Once more, there was a happy reunion of the family in the bright little flat that the hard-earned francs, sent in by Maurice while on tour of the provinces, had provided.

AND now he made a strange discovery. Although he had been playing in obscure provincial towns, Paris was already filled with his imitators. In cafés and music halls there were many who had affected his manner of wearing a cap, who had copied his grotesque make-up with the red nose and whitened eyelids.

In a way, they had served as advance agents for his arrival, for he found Paris ready and waiting for him. Again he started his steady march toward fame.

That has been one peculiar phase of his career. Never, at any time, has there been any sudden leap to fame, any startling stroke of fortune or overnight advance in salary. He has simply, at all times, followed the dictates of his heart, singing the gladness that was in him and winning steadily for himself more followers, more money, more fame. There was, however, one change in his act that made a great difference in his life. It occurred not long after his return from the country.

He had started in again in the little cabarets and night clubs where he had been singing before he made his trip. Bit by bit he worked his way into the larger and more popular cafés. Franc by franc his salary increased, and the name of Chevalier appeared in larger and brighter lights. The slowness of his progress had one advantage which he was to reap later. When he had finally attained the height of his popularity, he was perhaps the most widely known figure in the Parisian entertainment world.

There was no nook or cranny of Paris, however remote, where he had not been known and loved for his café singing in former days.

THEN at last he attained one of the pinnacles of the Parisian entertainer. He was signed to appear at the Follies Bergere, the gay and daring revue, as famous an institution as our own Ziegfeld Follies which attracts visitors the world over. At last he had definitely arrived. He was one of the drawing cards at this great show spot of Paris.

His name was everywhere, on everybody's lips. The happy effervescent singing voice that had once made toil-stained workers forget their cares of a Saturday night as it rang to the rafters of a little suburban theater, matured, ripened and mellowed, drawing Parisian pleasure seekers like a magnet.

But, strangely enough, Chevalier was only a name to them—a name and a grotesque make-up, centering around a red nose.

Parisians, perhaps, more than any other people in the world, idolize the favorites of their stage. They are fêted, wined and dined, taken up by society people, made the consorts of nobility, the best society of the land, even royalty.

Such was not the case with Chevalier. People who applauded his act beyond the footlights, took no interest in him off the stage. They flocked back stage to congratulate other actors, to invite them to their parties. But no knock on his dressing room door ever disturbed the lonely Chevalier as he removed the putty from his huge grotesque nose, and wiped the white grease paint from his eyelids.

THE peasant character which he had created seemed such a part of him that he hardly dared change it now. It seemed popular enough. If it satisfied others, it was satisfactory to him. His entire philosophy as an entertainer has always been to please.

Then one night it happened, this strange thing. His act had been unusually successful. They wanted him back for an encore. It suddenly occurred to him to give them a novelty. He would appear straight, without his costume, without his makeup, and try a different type of song.

He hurried to his dressing room, quickly removed the nose putty and make-up, the little peasant cap and the big pantaloons, and donned faultless evening clothes and a straw hat. Somehow, quite naturally, he set his straw hat at that rakish angle over one eye at which he wears it today. That, he says, has always been instinctive to him. Even when he walks down the street, he declares, he can hardly refrain from giving his hat an extra push from behind to bring it down over his eye.

Singing Through Life With Maurice

HE STEPPED out onto the stage. A hush fell over the house. A hush of breathless surprise. Could this be—was it possible that this was Chevalier, the clown, the man with the red nose? His new songs were in keeping with clothes, more polished, more sophisticated, more debonair, with less of the rollicking tang of the peasant songs.

When he ceased the house broke into wild applause. They called him back again and again. He caused a sensation such as he had never aroused in his comic costume of a peasant.

But the biggest change came in his life backstage. He was deluged with invitations. People sought every means to gain an introduction to him. He was suddenly taken up by the gay set of Paris, and, within a few weeks, he was forming friendships with some of the leading and most influential people of France and all Europe, friendships that have lasted solidly since that time.

It took some time for the reason for this change to come over him. At first, it was all a bewildering mystery to him. Then, bit by bit, it dawned on him. No one knew him as he really was. Pictures of actors off stage are not broadcast by the press as they are in this country. People had no idea what Chevalier really looked like. They pictured him off stage just as he was before the footlights, a funny man with a red nose and a peasant dialect. They never associated the name Chevalier with the real man to whom it belonged. Hence, they were startled and amazed to find before them this handsome man, dressed in the height of fashion, and to learn that this man, too, was Chevalier.

TRIUMPHS followed thick and fast. Mistinguette, famous danseuse, widely known as "the girl with the million dollar legs," was at the peak of her popularity. She had met Chevalier some years before when he was still only the bashful favorite of neighborhood music halls. Even then, she had prophesied without hesitation that a great future lay in store for him. Now she was demanding him as her dancing partner. This was a triumph indeed, for to be the dancing partner of Mistinguette was assurance in itself of standing in the theatrical world.

At this point, life seemed about to open before Chevalier. He was beginning to reap the rewards of all the years of patient struggle and self-denial. Poverty with its insistent demands, was behind him. He could live in comfort. His brothers and sisters were being educated; they were well cared for. Society had opened its arms to him. He was a favorite in the gay, night life of Paris, as well as on the stage. Yet this youth, who had attained so much and who had so much still before him, was yet only eighteen.

Then suddenly he was drafted for his period of military service. He looked on it simply as an ordinary interruption to his career. A man had to serve his term. But his would soon be over, and he could return to the stage where he was happiest. But, just as his term of service was about to end, the ominous thunder of war loomed just over the horizon. Instead of being mustered out, his regiment was hurried to the front, and was among the first to stem the advance of the German tide.

ALL through those long, grueling first days of the war, when wave after wave of the almost indomitable German machine forced the French back upon Paris, step by step, Chevalier fought in the front lines and watched his comrades mowed down around him. Things looked black indeed for France.

It was just before the tide turned that he was taken out of it. He had gone out in No-man's land on a raiding party. The raiders were almost in the shadow of the German lines when a shell burst nearby. He knew no more.

When he came to his senses, he was jolting along over a rough and shell-scarred road in a rickety ambulance. He was torn with pain. His head seemed about to burst. But at least he was going back to the rear, back for a rest among his own people before resuming the fierce business of war.

Suddenly he heard the sound of strange, gutteral voices. It came over him with a sudden chill that he was in a German ambulance, being sent behind the German lines.

There followed a long, hard fight for health in a German base hospital. Then he found himself in a German prison camp at Alten Grabow. He had but one thought now. To get back to his native France, to get back into the conflict. To that end, he shaped all his plans. But, alas, there were strong fences of barbed wire and alert guards to keep him in. Nevertheless, he felt sure that he would find a way.

He learned that Red Cross men were exchanged between nations. Suddenly, it came to him. He would apply for exchange as a Red Cross man.

BY CAREFUL maneuvering he obtained a job doing hard manual labor in the hospital division. There he became acquainted with Red Cross men, picked up their language, and learned what he could about their work. Secretly he took notes, and copied their mannerisms with an art learned in the theater.

Then at last came the time when Red Cross men in the camp were to make applications for exchange. In the few days before the examinations, he had discovered a friend and fellow countryman among the Red Cross men at the hospital. This friend agreed to coach him in the examination.

All through the night for three nights before the examination, in stolen moments in the dormitory or in the hospital, Chevalier crammed his head full of the information necessary to pass the examination and prove to the satisfaction of the commanding officers that he was a Red Cross man. It was a ticklish business, this, for if it were discovered that he were falsely trying to pass as a Red Cross man to escape by means of transfer, he would be shot without further ado.

AT LAST the fateful morning came. Chevalier stood before the examining officer, a hard, shrewd Prussian, with grey, gimlet eyes.

"Well," said he, "let's see what this one knows about the Red Cross business."

He asked Chevalier the first question on the list. But the weariness of cramming in his weakened condition had proven too much for him. Not a thought would come to him. His tongue clove to his mouth. He could not speak a word. He felt himself turning pale. The sweat was starting on his forehead. Hesitation would be fatal.

"It's all over now," he was saying to himself.

But the officer, too, was tired. He had had a hard night. He looked wearily at the line of men ahead of him for questioning. Then he turned to his aide.

"What about this one?" he said. "Is he all right, do you think?"

"Oh, certainly," replied the aide, "I have seen him working in the hospital division. He knows all about it. He's a Red Cross man, all right."

"Very well," replied the examining officer, "pass him."

In a daze, scarcely realizing how he had been snatched from death to safety, Chevalier turned away. That night he was on the way to the line with his safe conduct papers in his pocket. He scarcely dared breathe till he was once more on French soil, but before long he was safe at home again among his friends and family, after having been given up for dead.

He now holds a cross for distinguished service, as a result of his escape.

He did not, however, realize his desire to go back into action. He was a much sicker man than he realized. There followed another long period of recuperation. And by the time his strength had returned, the war was over.

Back to the stage, to his chosen livelihood, he went again. But the amusement world of Paris was demoralized. He could not pick up where he had left off. Instead, he went back to where he had been in the days of his early struggles, singing to the diners in a little café up on Montparnasse. And began again his long fight to the heights.

[To be continued]

Read next month how Chevalier fought his way back to become the idol of Paris once more, how he took London by storm, how glorious romance entered his life, and finally, how he came to America.

everybody if they had seen Dolores Del Rio. Result: no soap. There warn't no Del Rio.

In the end, the U. A. publicity boys tore out their hair in desperation and offered it to the assembled and disappointed gents and lassies of the press, who refused to take it instead of Del Rio. Finally, the station officials, seeing that the party looked as though it were developing into a riot, asked everybody to move or pay rent. They all obliged by moving.

But where was the lovely Del Rio? Well, sir, it seems that she had stopped off at the sooty of Pittsburgh, a coal hole in the Middle West, to refuel her heart. For, in this sooty of Pittsburgh there dwells a young man of whom she is exceedingly enamored, one Teddy Joyce. And, publicity men or no publicity men, Rotary banquets in Brooklyn or no Rotary banquets in Brooklyn, no one was going to take the Joyce out of Dolores' young life. And there you were. Left standing in the Pennsy station. Stood up, by garsh.

Dolores finally did come on, full of love for everybody, flavored with apologies.

When not making personal bows, Dolores is having a good time, mostly at the couturiere's, at opening nights and at the whoopee mills—the night clubs. She gets herself up in swell style, believe you me, Oliphant. When she enters, the orchestra plays the Mexican national anthem, King for a Day.

By the way, it's all off between Del Rio and Edwin Carewe, the director. In fact, Dolores claims it never was on. She feels the press and the wagging tongues gave her a nasty break in the matter of the death of her husband, Jaime Del Rio. She claims that Jaime did not die of a six years' broken heart over her friendship for Carewe but as a result of a six years' ailment from which he suffered. She insists she never stopped loving him. Carewe and Jaime were the best of friends. Carewe loaned Jaime money and was his adviser in many things. I'm inclined to be on Dolores' side in this matter mainly because I believe the tabloid dishrags and the gossips are always ready to look on the worst side of things, even in cases where no worst side exists. It may be all over, but Dolores still feels keenly about it all.

She is going to stay in New York for a spell and then make her way to Europe (Yurrup). Then she will return to Hollywood. And dot's dot as the fellow said when he ended the sentence.

brought with him his wife and secretary and the ambition to have a rattling good trip.

You see, Neil's not had a vacation in many a moon and is just about the hardest worked young juvenile in the yelling celluloid racket. (Well, wouldn't you say the squawkies made enough noise to be termed a "racket?"). He's had innumerable parts in Paramount pictures and when Paramount's had nothing for him to do, he's been "loaned" to other companies. Somehow or other, however, he's not gone gray under the pressure and remains a pretty good looking young man.

He's going to take his wife for a quick twirl around Yurrup. Then he expects to settle for a few weeks in a small town in Germany (he wouldn't divulge its name to me). It seems that when he worked in Isn't Life Wonderful?, that good old smug Baptist, D. W. Griffith, took the whole company to this particular town on location and Neil fell in love with it on the spot. Well, that's sentiment for you.

Evelyn, you know, has not attained stardom over night. She has risen by that gradual and difficult process known as hard work, struggling and tough times. She was formerly married to a young producer in Hollywood, known as Bernie Fineman, who gave her her first real rise in the world. But Bernie became a thing of the past when the

My snoopers tell me the beer's darned good in Deutschland. Hoppy days, Neil. And if Paramount insists you come right back before you get a few under your belt, just telegraph them: "Noah Beery, no workee!" They'll understand.

Speaking of Evelyn Brent

SPEAKING of Evelyn Brent, or to put it differently, speaking of Evelyn Brent, it seems that Evelyn Brent, speaking of her, came to town, was seen by no one and sailed for Yurrup, accompanied by her husband, Harry Edwards. She went for a short vacation and the culture, or as it is sometimes known, the culture. It is served in nice thin glasses with long, delicate stems and makes you feel good.

My pinkertons searched high and low for Evelyn, but couldn't locate hair nor hide of her. Several men claimed they saw a lovely damozel floating over the city on a milk-white charger around early dawn but they, when they were interviewed in the alcoholic ward of the Bellevue, admitted it might have been only the wisps of white smoke and the clouds of early morning they saw.

Evelyn, you know, has not attained stardom over night. She has risen by that gradual and difficult process known as hard work, struggling and tough times. She was formerly married to a young producer in Hollywood, known as Bernie Fineman, who gave her her first real rise in the world. But Bernie became a thing of the past when the breaks began to come for L'il Evelyn. Well, after all, a husband is only a husband and a career is a good cigar—or something to that effect.

Evelyn Brent, who they tell me, was once Betty Riggs of Tampa, has a terrific future ahead of her in the talkies. Neither of her parents were stage folk.

It is a marvel where she got her talent from. It would seem there can't be much truth in the old saying: "As the twig is Brent—"

Introducing Elsa Ersie

RKO, which stands for Radio Keith Orpheum, have made a discovery which they claim will unsettle the world. Without recourse to sending one of their executives abroad, they have unearthed a foreign star. Her name, hotsy patsies, is Elsa Ersie, her homeland, Hungary; her blood, really and truly royal. She comes of a family of bluebloods who lived near Budapest before the war and which was completely impoverished after the war. Elsa found recourse in a career in the Hunyak theater. She soon rose to the post of leading woman in some of Molnar's plays. She was imported to America by Ben Blumenthal, a Budapest theater owner and producer, who also discovered Pola Negri.

Elsa played in Louis the XIV and Rio Rita, for Ziegfeld. She sang beautifully, having been a bit of an opera singer back in dear old Hungary. And now RKO has her and is going to do big things with her.

I saw her work in some short subjects at the RKO studios here. She is playing the lead in a screamingly funny series known as the Ginsberg series, which Louis Brock is turning out with Nat Carr as the somewhat Semitic General Ginsberg.

She is what we vulgarians term hot stuff, being a striking blonde that socks you directly between the eyes with her barrage of s. a. She looks somewhat like Betty Compson and talks and sings in several languages, having had an education when she was young. She's a braw wench and bound to make her mark. I wish my name were Mark.

Short Shrift

TOD BROWNING sped through town with wife and family for an extended tour of Europe (Yurrup). He's just finished the Thirteenth Chair for Metro. Surely you've read some of Bugs' phoolery in the Hearst poipers in the past. "Grin and Baer it" is Bugs' motter . . . Lillian Gish and that old Charles Duell suit is still hanging fire. I hear that Lillian has played Charles considerable dirt and there is much to be said for him. Two millions are involved, you know, which is just about the sum Mr. Duell needs to assuage his hoit feelin's over what he calls Lil's doity doin's. Lil, we didn't think you had a mean thing in you. For shame! Nowadays the popular theme song around here with all this combining going on in movie circles is There's Merger in Your Dreamy Eyes. And that ought to hold you 'til next month.

His Chance Comes

AFTER having dangled around Hollywood for five or six years with his hat in his hands—and no takers—Ivan Lebedeff has suddenly become a sensation. At first they could only see this young Russian nobleman as a villain; now they are fighting over him for romantic leads.

The newspapers write of him as a "mystery." I don't know why. There is no mystery about him. He came from a family of the Russian nobility, was educated at a university where every pupil had to be of a family which had held patents of nobility for at least 150 years; he then finished his education in a university where young Russians of his class were educated for the diplomatic service. When the war came, he went into the cavalry and afterward fought against the Soviets in one or two of the "white" armies.

Wanted—A Genius

WHAT I am waiting for, this year, is to see some new and really vivid personality bob up on the screen. There are several attractive new girls and a few boys, but there are no Mary Pickfords or John Barrymores. I think the talkies will produce one.

$6000.00/100 IN PRIZES FREE

Giving fine prizes and lots of them absolutely free is my way of advertising and making friends. $10,000.00 paid in prizes already this year. Now comes $6000.00 more and every penny will be given free. Men and women, boys and girls, old and young anywhere can share in this great free offer.

FIND YOUR LUCKY DOLLAR!

HOW STARS FIGHT FAT

NO STARVING

MOVIE stars must stay thin. That's a part of their contract. But they dare not starve to do it, for that might wreck their health.

They consult the best physicians. And those physicians know that a common cause of excess fat is an under-active gland. In treating obesity or fighting obesity, they supply that lack as they find it.

The method they employ is embodied in Marmola prescription tablets. A famous medical laboratory prepares them to serve the purpose in an ideal way. The formula is in every box. All the good results are explained. Thus this modern method is brought to the masses at a modest cost.

Marmola has been used for 22 years—millions of boxes of it. Users have told the results to others, until Marmola has long held the top place in its field.

Excess fat blights youth and beauty, health and vigor. It is often caused by a lacking gland secretion, easily supplied. Why not learn—and at once—how much this scientific method can serve you. There are people in every circle who can tell you what it does. Go try Marmola, and watch the results for a little while. You will be delighted.

Marmola prescription tablets are sold by all druggists at $1 a box. Any druggist who is out will gladly order for you.

Rushing into Matrimony

Ramona; and also, I have a real affection for both Richard Dix and Warner. I don't go blind every time I make a friend.

El Haciendado

RAMON is still tinkering with the house he bought on Twenty-fourth street—far away from the film colony. It began as a meek-looking old-fashioned house on a city lot; but he has poured money into it until it looks like a Spanish estate. The little theater in the house has cost a fortune, and has the finest lighting equipment of any theater—professional or amateur—in California.

We Are Pure

HARRY CARROLL has rented the jinx-ridden Music Box Theater in Hollywood. Which is important only for the reason he gives why he fears not the hoodoo. He says he is going to be popular and profitable when he puts on a girl show "without one risqué line." He thinks that Hollywood girl shows have failed because they are not sufficiently pure. The innocent fun of the New York shows just leaves us blushing all over.

It is a fact, at that, that the most successful chain of stock companies in the history of Hollywood makes it a rule never to put on a play with the least trace of smut. Its patrons number most of the film colony.

But Not Too Pure

GEORGE SCARBOROUGH, the talkie author and playwright, seems not to be so optimistic about our moral status. His play Bad Babies, which has been running at a theater in Los Angeles is so far from chemical purity that the police have arrested all the actors, among them several movie celebrities, including Jobyna Ralston and Arthur Rankin.

Mr. Scarborough, who used to be a detective, says that he gathered the material for the opus in some of the high schools located in the heart of the film capital.

Changed Her Luck

JOBYNA has had nothing but tough luck since she quit Harold Lloyd's company to become a dramatic star. The same thing happened to Marie Mosquini. It must be admitted, however, that being a leading lady of a Harold Lloyd comedy is a task about as heavy as standing guard over the corner of Forty-second and Broadway to prevent stray cows from hooking the taxi cabs.

Hoarse Whispers

YOU never can tell. The talkies seem to have brought Raymond Griffith and his screen career back to life. He was about the last one ever to have been suspected of finding new fame in this direction. Ray cracked up his larynx in a stage play in which he had to scream and he has never been able to speak above a whisper since.

A Friendly Heart

WHEN Dorothy McKaye—friendless, crushed and forlorn—came out of State's prison, none of the newspapers knew where she had taken refuge. But I know. Raymond Griffith and his wife opened their home to the unfortunate actress. If anybody can figure out why she was sent to prison—except that she upstaged the jury—well, I can't. In a fit of over-heated chivalry, Paul Kelly killed Dorothy's estranged husband with his fists, and Dorothy was locked up on general principles. Kelly has also been released and is trying to fight his way back to the promising screen career which was snapped off.

A Regular Fellow

THE experiences of Hollywood with grand opera stars on the screen has not always been happy, but the film colony has found a new little playmate in the person of one of the greatest living singers—Lawrence Tibbett.

To begin with, they like him because he didn't change his name to Signor Luigi de Romeo, but clung to a moniker which sounds appropriate for a gas man. And he is just a peach of a good sport.

He says he belongs to the movies anyhow, because, when he was training his voice to bust into the Metropolitan Grand Opera Company—he made pork and beans money acting as an usher in one of Sid Grauman's theaters.

Frances Marion is now writing a picture story for him to be called The Rogue's Song.

Grand Opera Stars

JOHN McCORMICK, Jose Mojico, Alice Gentle and Tito Schipa are making movies or flirting with the same.

Michael Bohnen, the great German singer, came to Hollywood to make a singie version of Johnny Spielt Auf, but something went wrong, and he has retired to the Fatherland in high indignation. His wife, Mary Lewis, came here in the hope of breaking into one of the studios, but also retired in disgust.

Joe Strikes

TWO actors of the colony have struck. Joseph Schildkraut announces his retirement as a screen gambler. And Lois Moran will be darned if she will be wistful any more. Wherefor, Josef is to be a wise-cracking star reporter in a newspaper play at Universal; and Lois is sprightly in Words and Music.

Lupe Spends More

LUPE worries me. She is still tinkering with that Beverly Hills house for which she paid $47,000 cash. Hav-

The Most Daring Book Ever Written!

Elinor Glyn, famous author of "Three Weeks" has written an amazing book that should be read by every man and woman —married or single. "The Philosophy of Love" is not a novel —it is a penetrating searchlight fearlessly turned on the most intimate relations of men and women. Read below how you can get this thrilling book at our risk—without advancing a penny.

WILL you marry the man you love, or will you take the one you can get?

If a husband stops loving his wife, or becomes infatuated with another woman, who is to blame —the husband, the wife, or the "other woman?"

Will you win the girl you want, or will Fate select your Mate?

Should a bride tell her husband what happened at seventeen?

Will you be able to hold the love of the one you cherish—or will your marriage end in divorce?

Do you know how to make people like you?

ELINOR GLYN
"The Oracle of Love"

IF you can answer the above questions—if you know all there is to know about winning a woman's heart or holding a man's affections—you don't need "The Philosophy of Love." But if you are in doubt—if you don't know just how to handle your husband, or satisfy your wife, or win the devotion of the one you care for—then you must get this wonderful book. You can't afford to take chances with your happiness.

What Do YOU Know About Love?

DO you know how to win the one you love? Do you know why husbands, with devoted, virtuous wives, often become secret slaves to creatures of another "world"—and how to prevent it? Why do some men antagonize women, finding themselves beating against a stone wall in affairs of love? When is it dangerous to disregard convention? Do you know how to curb a headstrong man, or are you the victim of men's whims? Do you know how to retain a man's affection always? How to attract men? How to make love keep you youthful and fresh? Do you know the things that most irritate a man? Or disgust a woman? Can you tell when a man really loves you—or must you take his word for it? Do you know what you MUST NOT DO unless you want to be a "wall flower" or an "old maid"? Do you know the little things that make women like you? Why do "wonderful lovers" often become thoughtless husbands soon after marriage—and how can the wife prevent it? Do you know how to make marriage a perpetual honeymoon?

In "The Philosophy of Love,"—Elinor Glyn answers these precious questions—and countless others. She places a magnifying glass unflinchingly on the most intimate relations of men and women. No detail, no matter how delicate or avoided by others, is spared. She warns you gravely, she suggests wisely, she explains fully.

We admit that the book is decidedly daring. It had to be. A book of this type, to be of great value, could not mince words. But while Madame Glyn calls a spade a spade —while she deals with strong emotions and passions in her frank, fearless manner—she nevertheless handles her subject so tenderly and sacredly that the book can safely be read by any grown-up man or woman. In fact, anyone over eighteen should be compelled to read "The Philosophy of Love"; for, while ignorance may sometimes be bliss, it is folly of the rankest sort to be ignorant of the problems of love and marriage. As one mother wrote us: "I wish I had read this book when I was a young girl—it would have saved me a lot of misery and suffering."

Certain self-appointed censors may condemn "The Philosophy of Love." Anything of such an unusual character generally is. But Madame Glyn is content to rest her world wide reputation on this book—the greatest masterpiece of love ever attempted!

What Every Man and Woman Should Know

- —how to win the man you love.
- —how to win the girl you want.
- —how to hold your husband's love.
- —how to make people admire you.
- —why men "step out" and leave their wives alone.
- —why many marriages end in despair.
- —how to hold a woman's affection.
- —how to keep a husband home nights.
- —why most women don't know how to make love.
- —things that turn men against you.
- —how to make marriage a perpetual honeymoon.
- —the "danger year" of married life.
- —how to ignite love—how to keep it flaming
- —how to rekindle it if burnt out.
- —how to cope with the "hunting instinct" in men.
- —how to attract people you like.
- —why some men and women are always lovable, regardless of age.
- —how to make love keep you young.
- —must all men be either "dubs" or devils?
- —how to increase your desirability in a man's eye.
- —how to tell if someone really loves you.
- —things that make a woman "cheap" or "common."
- —how to make people do the things you want them to.

No, dear readers, this is not a new wrinkle in cameras, nor are these pretty little girlies trying to hog the film. It is just a camera tripod that has fallen from grace, being put to the undignified use of supporting a makeup kit before which five beauteous maidens are making minor repairs to their complexions between scenes of Billie Dove's latest picture, "The Painted Angel."

Rushing Into Matrimony

ing torn it all up and built it over again, she is now having a swimming pool built.

White Sisters

I DON'T know how much religious fervor it implies, but all Hollywood is turning into "white sisters." Having tanned to the color of wild Africans all summer at the beaches, the girls are bleaching out to try to tune in to the color of the popular brand of hair—which is so blond that it is almost white. Constance Talmadge dug up the fad somewhere; Lilyan Tashman was next; and now they are all that way.

Writer Turns Actor

IT'S A FUNNY IDEA, but the greatest dialogue writer extant comes to Hollywood at a time when they are trying desperately to find dialogue writers—as an actor, Donald Ogden Stewart, like Robert Benchley, finds acting in the movies more entertaining than writing for them or about them. He has come to the M-G-M studio as a play actor—to take part in King Vidor's picture Dulcy.

Take That, Talkies!

WELL, after all, I don't know about the talkies. Two of the greatest hits of the season have been made by silent pictures—The Single Standard, with Greta Garbo, and Our Modern Maidens, with Joan Crawford and Anita Page. The prospects are that, in the future, both kinds will be made. There are pictures in which talk is a handicap. I think that—in spite of its popularity—The Mysterious Dr. Fu Manchu would have been better silent. The talk spoiled the mystery.

What! Still at It?

THE other day a squadron of airplanes came whirling over the little ranch where I live, just outside of Los Angeles. I guessed that the youthful Mr. Hughes must be at it again.

Right. It was a re-take from his self-directed and home-made picture, Hell's Angels.

This is the only apparently permanent picture I have ever encountered. It has already been in the making for over two years and has cost something over $3,000,000.

It was so long in the doing that Mr. Hughes let the talkies steal up on him, so now he has to do it again, in sound. Happily for him, his fond papa has struck oil in Texas and the money is coming in faster than he can make airplane pictures. Ben Lyon will grow old acting the lead.

Marilyn's Sally Grows Up

record-breaking run of Sally. Do not make the mistake of thinking Marilyn has only beauty and that all her talent lies in dancing. She is one of those fortunate beings in whom the ability to add to her accomplishments is a natural trait. She only began her career as a dancer, a toe dancer who sped across the stage in bewildering steps to the tune of thundering applause. She had never sang when Ziegfeld decided to star her, so she learned how, taking lessons daily until the opening of the show.

Critics had scoffed. They said that it wasn't probable that a dancer could learn to sing well enough to satisfy a critical Broadway. The first night was a momentous occasion. Marilyn sang with nervousness but clearly and charmingly.

MARILYN was reaching the height of her career when she fell in love with Jack Pickford. Mary's kid brother was a laughing, happy-go-lucky lad whose infectious smile went straight to Miss Miller's heart.

They were married in September, 1922. Marilyn continued to win plaudits as the star of Sally, but when summer came she went to Hollywood to be with her husband.

Broadway never let go its hold on its blonde favorite. The bright lights called insistently, and in August, 1924, Marilyn went back to New York to start rehearsals for the Dillingham production of Peter Pan.

Hollywood and Broadway has always been an oil and water combination. They don't mix worth a darn. Jack knew it, and so did Marilyn. The romance that had begun so auspiciously for both began to languish.

It was not until 1926 that Marilyn obtained a Paris divorce, and was once more heart whole and fancy free. Other men appeared on her immediate horizon—among them the attractive Ben Lyon who is now engaged to Bebe Daniels.

Marilyn Miller found another test of her ability awaiting her in Peter Pan, and she met the challenge, as usual, with triumph. This time she was called upon to "read lines," and become a dramatic actress.

Marilyn's career has always gone forward—on and on, always from success to a greater success in the realm of Broadway musical comedy. And now, seeking greater fame, she comes to the screen in her greatest stage triumph—her own Sally.

I SUPPOSE that in this day of all-color, all-song, all-dance extravaganzas, surprises are entirely out of place, yet I must be honest and admit that I gasped when I beheld the garden set for Sally. I felt like a child being given his first glimpse of Fairyland.

It is the most elaborate I have ever seen. More than a million square feet of lumber went into its construction. Whole nurseries were purchased to supply the shrubbery and rare plants and flowers. It represents a part of the estate of a Long Island millionaire. The home at one end is two stories high, finished in stucco, and has seventy windows in the front elevation.

There is an elevated platform for dancing that is two hundred feet wide and forty deep. Two grand stairways wind up a balcony from this dance floor which is of special tiling laid in fantastic design.

Ninety pieces of period furniture, chosen especially for color effects, are used to dress the set.

The garden itself is a riot of hues. Forty varieties of blossoms are laid out in unique designs, surrounded by hedges. There are two electrically lighted fountain-statues, towering high in the air, placed in the center of two large lily ponds, each containing two hundred huge water lilies.

There are four other immense statues ranged along the garden walls, five smaller statues, thirty ornamental urns, twenty fantastic marble benches, thirty pillars supporting peroglas and more than fifty boxed trees in full bloom.

PICTURE, if you can, this spectacular garden filled with thirty-five principals, sixty dancing girls, forty show girls, sixty dancing boys and two hundred and fifty extras, all gaily gowned in bright colors, singing and dancing amid the flower beds! It will give you the same idea of the sight that greeted me the day I visited Marilyn. Upon the raised floor were fifty dancing boys. In their midst was the golden head of Marilyn as Sally. She was dressed in pink chiffon, and as she tripped in and out among the boys, barely escaping their outstretched arms, she sang I'm a Wild, Wild Rose, with the men joining in the chorus.

There are other sets, including the Green Tree Inn with its checkered table clothes, its big green tree in the center and its dance floor. Then there is the stage set, where Sally does the butterfly number—written especially for Sally by Victor Herbert—supported by Albertina Rasch dancers. There also is another garden scene, with rocky hills rising in the background, down which trickles a water-fall.

Other scenes required smaller sets, such as the hotel room in which Sally lived, her dressing room in the theater, and the country lane where Blair Fraquar, played by Alexander Gray, sings to her. And he can sing, too, for he made a name for himself in the Broadway production of The Desert Song. Oh, yes, before we leave this "growed-up" Sally, I must not forget to tell you that funny Joe E. Brown is in Sally, and also T. Roy Barnes and Pert Kelton, another big Broadway boy.

The Letter That Saved Bob Johnson's Job

—and paved the way for a better one!

It was written to his employer by the International Correspondence Schools. It told how "Robert Johnson had enrolled for a course of home-study and had received a mark of 94 for his first lesson."

Bob answered the summons to the Chief's office with just a little fear and trembling, for a lot of men were being dropped—a lot more were having their pay reduced.

But as Bob came in, his employer rose quickly from his chair and grasped Bob warmly by the hand.

"I want to congratulate you, young man, on the marks you are making with the I. C. S. I am glad to see that you are training yourself not only for your present job, but for the job ahead.

"We're cutting the pay-roll. Until I received this letter, I had you in mind as one of the men to be dropped. But not now. Keep on studying—keep your eyes open—and pretty soon there'll be a still better job for you around here. We're always looking for trained men."

Won't you let the I. C. S. help you, too? Won't you trade a few hours of your spare time for a good job, a good salary and the comforts that go with it? Then mark the work you like best on the coupon below and mail it to Scranton today. That doesn't obligate you in the least, but it will be your first big step toward success. Do it now!

Don't Get Married!

I work just about every evening on the stage.

I work many long, long days at the motion picture studios.

I say whatever I want to—to people who can't or won't contradict or interrupt me.

My cook, and the cooks of my mother and sisters, are excellent. Incidentally, I am a pretty good cook myself, and—if I do say it—have made about everything from corn-meal muffins to fancy chicken dinners. So you see, dear ladies and gentlemen, that old and honored adage about finding the way to a man's heart through his tummy wouldn't be so good in my case!

A pleasant Filipino boy, like a guardian angel, looks after me and my cats and dogs. Buttons are always carefully sewed on. Meals are planned for my convenience. The automobile is invariably ready to whirl me anywhere whenever I need it.

My mother and brothers and sister criticize me sometimes, but my little nieces and nephews and dogs and cats never do. They amuse me wonderfully and I amuse them, too, no doubt.

Why marry? Why have a wife? There is nothing left for her to do, except maybe bring my slippers. And from a careful survey of the subject, I have come to the conclusion that a Hollywood wife just isn't trained that way!

ANOTHER thing—occasionally, I come home from a hard day's work feeling about as tired and cross and irritable as it is possible to feel. Sometimes, in that mood, I even feel like "cussing," but generally don't. However, if I had a wife, who knows but what I'd feel like it and would do it. And that would be just too bad, wouldn't it?

Again, while I am not exactly a solitary individual, still, I do occasionally like to be alone with just my thoughts for company, and what chance has a man to be alone when he has a wife?

I like to do a bit of talking once in a while, too. If there happened to be a Mrs. Horton, well, maybe she'd "shut me up" and do all the talking herself!

I have a chance to do a lot of talking, though, in the series of comedies I am now making for Educational Pictures. I enjoy talking in these—it's a fact. And I also enjoy playing in them. They are so interesting to make. No dull moments to them. Take this one I'm playing in now. I chose Rita Carewe, an unusually beautiful and talented feminine player of the type that gentlemen are supposed to prefer, as my leading lady. Now, they all say my preference runs in the direction of blondes. Maybe it does, but I'm not saying so.

I am somewhat of a rover, too—not that I like to tramp all around the country or anything like that—but I do like to sometimes go places, suddenly, hardly knowing just where I will go. That's all right, seeing that I am unmarried, but what do most wives think about "trip-taking" husbands? Plenty, ladies and gentlemen, plenty!

I'VE been pretty lucky about having fans—I mean by that, quite a few people come to see my stage productions and my Educational comedies. Maybe it's merely because I have a habit of picking such good-looking leading ladies as May McAvoy, Sylvia Field, Lois Wilson, Patsy Ruth Miller, Florence Eldridge or Rita Carewe. Now, if I married, perhaps no one would come to see me anymore! The girls in particular, quite likely would exclaim: "Oh, Eddie's married now, so let's not go to see him any more."

I think perhaps my rather strict New England bringing up has somehing to do with the fact that I've never married. I lived in New England for quite a time and had that kind of a bringing up. That was the age when dear old mothers warned their sons against those wild, wild women!

"Watch out, son, watch out," they would start the day with, "if you don't, some girl will get hold of you!"

And when the young fellows of that "exciting" age were a little older, their mothers would exclaim:

"Well, now, son, perhaps you had better be thinking about marrying and settle down. It's time you gave up those gay friends of yours and all your fun and settle down with a wife."

That was it always—settle down, settle down, settle down! Spurn all the fun and recreation and marry and work for the rest of one's life! That was the recipe then. Nowadays, it is something else again.

The modern generation—at least many of them—regard marriage in an entirely different way. They marry for fun. They go into it gaily and if they tire of it, come out of it just as lightly.

I never could treat marriage in a ligh. manner. If I ever did think of marrying, I would want it to last, not for a day, but forever. And that's just the length of time most modern marriages don't last!

As I'm living now, I'm my own boss. No one has any cause to worry over me. No one has a right to tell me what I shall do and shall not do. No one can hit me over the head with a rolling pin if I happen to come home a little late! You see, it's not so bad.

I've thought it all out carefully, and so, I will conclude my little lecture to you with these words—

Don't Get Married!
